Roosevelt Expected to Oppose Ship Transfers

U. S. Firm Asks to Sell Old Trawlers To France for Mine Sweepers

Shipping Relief

LEGISLATION FOR relief of operators and crews laid up by neutrality act restrictions was called for by Senator Bailey. Page 8.

President Disapproves

Presidential disapproval, at least for the present, of the request for transfer of eight United States Lines ships to Panamanian registry was forecast widely here last night.

The shift, of approved, would permit the vessels to maintain their service to European ports from which, under the new neutrality law, they would be barred while flying the American flag.

At the same time, there arose a new question linked with this country's determination to preserve its neutrality, as application was filed for permission to sell some aging merchant vessels to one of the belligerent countries.

President Roosevelt yesterday conferred with officials on both sides of the registry transfer controversy as the neutrality-shipping problem was further complicated by these developments:

The Portland Trawling Co., requested permission to sell five used trawlers to the French Line. It was assumed in some circles that France would use the craft as minesweepers.

106 U. S. Ships Transferred

It was announced by the Maritime Commission that 106 American ships already have been transferred to foreign registry in the last year, 27 of them in October and 19 in September.

President Roosevelt received the views of Secretary of State Hull, who is opposed to the United States Lines' request, and those of Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the Maritime Commission, which favors granting the application.

House Majority Leader Rayburn also discussed the proposal with the Chief Executive. While there has been considerable Congressional criticism of the plan as an "evasion" of the law, Rayburn declined to reveal his own stand.

Ship union leaders were on their way to confer with the President today on the problem of caring for 8,000 to 10,000 seamen who will be thrown out of jobs by the neutrality law restrictions on American shipping.

Mr. Roosevelt was reported to have decided against granting the United States Lines' application at present, but there were reports that transfer of the vessels, either as a fleet or individually, to some other flag than that of Panama might later be permitted.

Canal Defense a Factor

Desire to avoid endangering the neutrality of Panama, which might be threatened if intensified sea warfare following the transfer should result in sinkings of ships under her registry was reported to have been a factor in bringing the decision. This country's great interest in preserving the neutrality of Panama, in view of the need for defending the canal, was pointed out.

While the trawler sale deal was a

Amsterdam, Nov. 9.—A frontier incident is reported from Venlo, where at least one person is dead following an armed clash between German officials and Netherlanders.

A German car approached the frontier this afternoon and crossed the German barrier. Simultaneously a Dutch car approached the Dutch barrier 10 yards from the German customs house. German civilians in the car are supposed to have wanted to continue into Holland in the Dutch car.

While the German civilians were rushing forward, German customs officials, partly uniformed and all armed, ran across the Dutch frontier, menacing Dutch onlookers and ordering visitors in a nearby cafe to leave the windows.

Wild shooting followed, resulting in an unknown number of casualties. One Dutch motorist is reported to have been killed and dragged into German territory. It is reported that several other Netherlanders were kidnaped. The Dutch car was pushed into Germany. Authorities are rushing an inquiry.

[Venlo is opposite and slightly north of Dusseldorf and Krefeld, in the region where concentration of German troops and tanks has been reported in recent days, the United Press said.—Editor's note.]

Cabinet in Night Session

The cabinet met tonight and was still sitting at midnight, a communique about the Venlo incident, which is considered very serious, announced. A foreign affairs spokesman said at 11 p. m., "the situation is slightly better," leaving doubt as to whether there had been any German demands on The Hague.

The newspaper Politiken was informed the situation is extremely aggravated after the cabinet, meeting in an all-night session, decided to cancel all furloughs and authorized military requisition of all forms of transportation, including autos and boats. A sudden change in the

This Hemisphere May Become Civilization's Trustee, Hull Says

Educators From Several Hundred Colleges Take First Step Toward Effecting Cultural Amity Among Americas at Parley Here

By James D. Secrest.
Post Staff Writer

With a warning from Secretary Hull that a prolonged European war may make this hemisphere the trustee of western civilization, educators from several hundred colleges and universities of the United States yesterday took the first step toward effecting cultural amity among the American republics.

At the same time the educators threw out a broad hint that they needed financial aid from business interests who stand to gain from closer American ties.

"It is possible that the great shadow that lies heavily over Europe may become a long twilight," said Secretary Hull at a luncheon in the Mayflower Hotel.

"It is not inconceivable that many of the lights of western civilization may there be dimmed or altogether put out. It may even be that for a time the New World may have to guard and maintain achievements of that civilization, holding them in trust for a time when they can once more be general throughout the world.

"Though governments can help, this is not a task for government alone, but for all of us. The teachers, the men of science and learning throughout the New World must resolve to work together to accomplish that function which is rightfully theirs—to guard, to enrich.

G. D. Guggenheim Found Shot Dead, Lying on Rifle

New York, Nov. 9 (AP).—George Denver Guggenheim, only son of Simon Guggenheim, philanthropist and former Senator from Colorado, was found dead tonight in his room at the Hotel Paramount, from a bullet wound in the head. A rifle lay under his body.

An assistant manager making a check of the room found the body. Guggenheim, he said, had registered yesterday under the name of Hubert Hilderbrand, of San Francisco.

The body was fully clothed but the room was in disorder and several rifle shots had pierced the ceiling. Apparently the weapon had continued firing after the trigger first was pulled.

Memphis Elects Crump Mayor for 5 Minutes

By the Associated Press

Memphis, Tenn., Nov. 9.—E. H. Crump got himself elected Mayor of Memphis today just so a friend can have the job.

The former Representative and long-time political chieftain of Shelby County walked right in without opposition, but he will hold his $10,000-a-year post only about five minutes after he takes office January 1.

Then he will resign, the Crump-controlled city commission will elect Representative Walter Chandler to the vacancy and one of the strangest of political transactions will be complete.

The Crump organization selected Chandler for the mayor's chair months ago, but when the time came to qualify the neutrality fight was waxing warm in Congress and the city charter barred him as a candidate while he was still a Representative.

Crump was insistent that Chandler remain in Congress to support President Roosevelt's neutrality program so he himself entered the race, announcing he would merely win and hold the office until Chandler could claim it.

Crump's victory was not a new story to him. In the almost 40 years that he has been Memphis' dominant political figure he has run for office 19 times and has yet to lose.

PUC to Study All-Natural Gas for Capital

Survey to Decide if Change From Mixture Would Reduce Cost

By Charles Stofberg
Post Staff Writer

Possibility of rate reduction to D. C. consumers through substitution of natural gas for the present mixed product will be investigated by the Public Utilities Commission, it was announced yesterday.

In a formal order, the commission said it would assign a special investigator to delve into the possible effect on rates a complete substitution of natural gas would have on the monthly bills.

The order brought a prompt reply from M. L. Sperry, president of the Washington Gas Light Co., who said the uncertainties of present world conditions would make any major change in utility service in Washington a serious question.

He said if natural gas were brought into Washington on a full-time basis, it would mean that every piece of gas apparatus in the city

Canada to Get American Planes

Ottawa, Ontario, Nov. 9—A British air mission spokesman tonight confirmed the London report that several hundred Harvard training planes ordered in the United States by Great Britain would be delivered to Canada to train pilots for all the empire.

Unconfirmed reports in Ottawa were that the Canadian government had placed a $5,000,000 aircraft order with dominion companies.

In addition to the 500 Harvards, the dominion will need an additional 1,000 planes. Presumably these will be fast pursuit planes and heavy bombers.

London, Nov. 9.—Repeal of the United States arms embargo, the signing of the Turkish treaty and the Russian "humiliation" of Germany have strengthened the Allies, Prime Minister Chamberlain said today, but "past experience" has taught him to hold little hope that Adolf Hitler's response to the Belgian and Dutch offer of mediation will provide any basis for peace.

The prime minister's pronouncement was made to a small but distinguished company at the lord mayor's luncheon which, because of war conditions, was held without pomp or ceremony at the Mansion House instead of historic Guildhall.

The 70-year-old war leader of the British Empire was unable to be present himself because of an attack of gout. Sir John Simon, chancellor of the exchequer, spoke as his proxy.

2 U.S. Destroyers Damaged in Crash

Mare Island, Calif., Nov. 9 (AP).—The destroyers Gamble and Montgomery were damaged by a collision in Carquinez Straits, navy officials disclosed today.

The damage was not severe but the Gamble listed sharply after the crash last night and officers thought for a time the ship would have to be beached to prevent it from sinking. A changing tide was blamed for the accident. It occurred as the vessels were anchoring near the navy yard.

London, Nov. 9.—The British steamer Carmarthen, of 981 tons, was sunk with two men killed and six injured by an explosion a few miles off the British coast today. It took 15 survivors only an hour and a half in a lifeboat to reach shore.

One of those killed was the second engineer. Survivors said there was a terrific explosion and the ship sank almost immediately.

Berlin Expects Big Offensive To Begin Tomorrow or Sunday

Lightning Attack on England Will Be Answer to Bomb Attempt, Nazis Say, Convinced British Plotted Assassination

By Otto D. Tolischus

Berlin, Nov. 9.—The official German reaction to the startling events of the last 48 hours, which began with the abortive peace proposal of King Leopold and Queen Wilhelmina and ended with the Munich attempt to assassinate Adolf Hitler, has hardened previous apprehensions into a moral certainty that the Fuehrer is about to launch a major military offensive against the British empire.

This moral certainty dominates all neutral quarters in Berlin tonight and takes precedence over both the shock that such an attempt was made in the rigidly-controlled Third Reich, and gratification that it did not lead to more serious consequences.

Armistice Day Mentioned

Even the presumptive date of such an offensive is being floated about and though everything regarding either the time or place of the military operations in a country at war must naturally remain speculation, it is noteworthy that all these rumors revolve around the 11th or 12th of this month, that is around Armistice Day on which the World War ended 21 years ago.

Such a military offensive—if any—would be naturally quite independent of the latest events, and according to the general impression, preparations for it began some time ago. The latest straw in the wind

Dope Peddler's Paradise

Adequate Drug Laws Defeated by Leniency

By Gerald G. Gross.
Post Staff Writer

Most of the District's important problems—public health, traffic, public school expansion, police and fire protection, etc.—are of the kind that requires new legislation or additional appropriations, usually both, to solve. In this respect the Capital's illicit drug traffic is unique. Curbing it calls for no more laws, no more money.

It undoubtedly is true that if the police narcotics squad were larger and if there were more Federal agents assigned to the District, arrests would rise in number. But loading the police blotter with names is not the solution, authorities are agreed.

Peddlers are not afraid of arrest. What they dread is the long term. To quote the Treasury Department, parent of the Bureau of Narcotics: "As long as narcotic violators travel in a vicious circle from violation to violation with short

FANFARE FOR A HERO.

(An Armistice Day fantasy)

He lies on a hillside southwest of the Potomac . . . Below him airplanes rise from the drome in the lowlands and fly above the small boats in the river—a thrilling sight against the Washington backdrop, if he could but see.

Harlan Miller

* * * *

On the left, beyond the formal terrace beyond the river, the gray stone buildings of the Government march from the Lincoln Memorial past the White House and the Washington Monument to the voluptuous dome of the Capitol.

* * * *

There the messages were written, the speeches uttered, the laws voted with the ayes and noes and signed; there the military commands went forth which sent him across the sea to die in a foreign war, the Unknown Soldier, this most singular enigmatic hero of our century, under the marble slab in Arlington.

"—a wreath from royalty."

Hundreds have stood here whose son he may have been, whose lover or husband or father perhaps he was . . . Did he leave a son behind? An eager, militant, warlike son? A son with a bitter hatred for war? His son is trench size now.

* * * *

What manner of man was he? Probably he was in his middle twenties, 24 or 26 . . . Was he a volunteer? Was he drafted? Did his heart leap or sink as he put on his uniform the first time? Was his blood racing with high adventure as he climbed the gang-plank?

* * * *

Was he a tall, slim, silent, drawling son of the West? Was he short, husky, garrulous, passionate? Was he of Revolutionary stock or the son of an immigrant? Was he blond, dark-haired, red-haired with blue eyes? Was he shy and withdrawn, or was he the life of the party, always kidding? Was he an aristocrat like Quentin Roosevelt, or was he the obscure son of an obscure family, as unknown in life as in death? Was he a lieutenant or a noncom or a private?

* * * *

What was the way of his death? Did it stalk him and find him in his trench? Did he go forth to meet it crawling in the wet murky dawn through the stubble of some inauspicious yellow field? Did he go toward it with a rush, invincible, invulnerable, immortal?

* * * *

By what sudden quirk did his death overtake him? Did he swerve to left or right to tighten a gap in the line? Did he avoid one bursting shell and praise his lucky star, only to run into another? Did death come to him with merciful swiftness? Did it torture him for agonized hours seeming like eons? Did he lie for weeks in some thicket or shellhole, half buried?

"—his last hour."

Had he ever seen this Washington, his Capital, which now lies spread out below him? Had he wandered through its avenues as a tourist with a camera? Had he once looked down from the Monument toward this Virginia hillside where he would one day lie in enviable but anonymous glory?

* * * *

Had he ever strolled among these graves in Arlington, a little awed and depressed by the reminders of the illustrious dead, faintly troubled by the uneventful happiness of his own obscure, peaceful life, who is now honored for a multitude, beyond them all?

* * * *

Would he smile if he stood now on these broad stone steps, watching one of his 4,000,000 buddies pose uncomfortably but stubbornly against this marble slab while a proud fortyish wife snaps a camera and the sentry marches past, eyes front, toward the canvas sentry box and the greenhouses of the experimental farm in the valley below glisten in the westerly sun?

* * * *

His last hour . . . The top sergeant says we've got 'em on the run . . . Next week the war will be over . . . Anyhow, we're due to move out tomorrow . . . Damn this mud! . . . Maybe two weeks' leave in some dry, sunny place in the south of France . . . Haven't been dry for three days . . . Maybe a bottle of wine with a pretty French girl . . . Home before Christmas and a parade down Main street . . . The job and the girl . . . The hero's homecoming . . . So much to tell . . .

Eccles Urges Tax Rise on Small Incomes

Also Asks Higher Levies on Big Corporations To Pay Defense Bill

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Nov. 9.—Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, tonight called for higher taxes on small incomes and big corporations to finance national defense expenditures, balance the budget and solve the problem of idle money.

In a speech on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the St. Louis Federal Reserve Bank, Eccles also scouted any idea that war business would be of any long range benefit to the United States.

The armament orders and other war business, he asserted, will only aggravate the investment problem caused by the piling up of $5,350,000,000 in the Nation's banks.

Offers Six-Point Program

Reduce exemptions which enable single men earning less than $1,000 and family heads earning less than $2,500 to escape Federal income taxes.

Increase tax rates on persons earning from $5,000 to $50,000.

Increase the "normal" income tax on corporations to take away a share of "war profits."

Put extra taxes on "rainy day reserves" piled up in "excessive amounts" by large corporations.

Reduce consumer taxes, such as the excises on automobiles, gasoline and theater tickets.

Adjust social security and unemployment insurance taxes so that they will not exceed benefit payments, at least until times are much better.

"We are hearing today," Eccles said, "proposals that the Government should reduce some of the present expenditures, particularly for agricultural benefits and for work relief, in order that funds for an expanded armament program may be provided without an increased deficit or an increase in taxes.

Opposes Relief Cuts

"In my opinion, it would be unfair and unsound economically to pass increased armaments cost on to those of the low-income groups who would profit the least out of foreign or domestic expenditures for armament, who are the least able to bear the costs and whose increased purchasing power is essential to our economic welfare."

The chairman was referring to views such as have been expressed by influential Senators in recent weeks, and his retort was the first reaction from within the Administration's inner circle.

Instead of slashing relief and farm funds, Eccles continued, "we should follow the unpopular, but necessary course of imposing additional taxation in order to meet the added costs of our armament program and to reduce the deficit, without sacrificing the low-income groups whose sustained and increasing purchasing power is needed to sustain and increase production.

"Accordingly, additional taxation should be levied, not alone upon war profits, but upon those income groups now relatively undertaxed among whom the greatest proportion of savings that are unable to find profitable outlet today are now accumulating. At the same time, I favor increasing domestic purchasing power by decreasing consumption taxes."

Eccles said his plan for taxing "rainy day reserves" of big corporations was not the unpopular undistributed profits tax which the last Congress repealed after three years of controversy. He said the proposed tax would not apply to small businessmen at all, and would not apply to big corporations if they used their surplus profits to pay dividends or to modernize or expand plant.

Speaker to Stay For Consultation

By the Associated Press

Representative Rayburn, of Texas, House Democratic leader, said after a White House call yesterday that Speaker Bankhead would remain in Washington during the Congressional recess and would be available for consultation with President Roosevelt on any problems which may arise.

Rayburn, the President's luncheon guest, said he had talked with Mr. Roosevelt about "the situation in general" and had discussed the legislative outlook for the next Congressional session only "inferentially." He said they discussed the proposed transfer of American ships to Panamanian registry.

The Gallup Poll

By Dr. George Gallup

Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Nov. 9.—The six weeks' debate in Congress over the neutrality act, in which many Republican members took the less popular side of the issue and voted to keep the embargo, brought virtually no change in the popularity of the leading Republican aspirants for the presidency, as measured by a National Institute survey.

GEORGE GALLUP

Senator Vandenberg, who fought to keep the embargo, and his Republican colleague, Senator Taft, who voted to lift the embargo, remain just about as popular today as when the debate started. And the man who continues to lead in Republican popularity is one who took no part in the neutrality discussions at all—Thomas F. Dewey, of New York.

These facts are revealed in a study among a cross-section of Republican voters throughout the country in which this question was asked:

"Whom would you like to see elected President in 1940?"

Identical sureys nave been conducted at regular intervals in the past, the previous one having been early in October, when the neutrality debate began. The vote of those with opinions in the two most recent surveys compares as follows:

	Per Cent Favoring
TODAY
Dewey	39
Vandenberg	26
Taft	18
Hoover	5
Landon	3
Borah	3
Lindbergh	1
Lodge	1
Others	4
LAST MONTH
Dewey	39
Vandenberg	27
Taft	17
Hoover	5
Landon	3
Borah	3
Lindbergh	1
Bricker	1
Others	4

In both surveys, slightly less than half of Republican voters said they were undecided about candidates at the present time.

Although Senators Vandenberg and Borah were the leaders of the Senate bloc opposed to lifting the embargo—a cause found to be less popular with the people in Institute surveys than the Administration's program—Borah's popularity remained the same, and Vandenburg's dropped only one point. Senator Taft, who voted with the Administration on the embargo, gained slightly.

Despite the great amount of publicity given during the month to the views of Herbert Hoover and of Charles A. Lindbergh, their respective vote showed no net change in this survey.

A question of vital political interest is how Republicans would vote if it came to a choice among the three top leaders—Dewey, Vandenberg and Taft.

The Institute accordingly asked a second question in its survey, as follows:

"If it came to a choice between Robert Taft, Thomas Dewey or Arthur Vandenberg for President, which one would you prefer?"

On this question a large majority of voters expressed an opinion, only one person in every six (18 per cent) being undecided.

The results were:

Dewey	44%
Vandenberg	31
Taft	25

Thomas E. Dewey has held the lead in Republican surveys for exactly a year, having risen to top choice just after his campaign for the governorship of New York in 1938. But his popularity as a candidate declined after the war broke out in Europe. Between July and October, there was an eight-point drop in the number of Republicans saying they would like to see him win in 1940.

In addition to the leading choices in today's survey, the following persons received the most frequent mention: Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, of New York; Gov. John E. Bricker of Ohio, Publisher Frank Knox, of Chicago; Senator Styles Bridges, of New Hampshire; Henry Ford, Senator Gerald P. Nye, of North Dakota; Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas; Gov. Harold Stassen of Minnesota, Congressman Bruce Barton, Gov. Arthur James of Pennsylvania, Senator Charles McNary, of Oregon; Gov. Leverett Saltonstall of Massachusetts, Publisher Frank Gannett, of Rochester; Gov. William Vanderbilt of Rhode Island, Senator Hiram Johnson, of California; Glenn Frank, Alfred P. Sloan and William Allen White.

Wage Suit Filed For D. C. Red Caps

Wages for 260 Union Station "red caps" were sought in a suit filed in the District Court against the Washington Terminal Co. yesterday.

Willard S. Townsend, president of the International Brotherhood of Red Caps, and John L. Yancey, secretary-treasurer, sued on behalf of regular and part-time porters.

The "red caps" have been paid only a few cents an hour, the suit said, instead of the 25 cents an hour provided by the fair labor standards act up to October 22. The legal wage went up to 30 cents an hour on October 23.

Noble Calls Chest Citadel Of Democracy

Social Consciousness Is Vital to American System, He Declares

Social consciousness, portrayed by generous gifts to the Community Chest and other private agencies for charitable purposes, is the true citadel of democracy, Edward J. Noble, Undersecretary of Commerce, said yesterday.

"Americans cannot be indifferent to this vital type of private assistance," he told approximately 900 volunteer solicitors at a luncheon in the Willard Hotel. They reported 28,686 gifts or pledges, totaling $486,077.23.

"In 1939 this is essential more than ever before because people must not become discouraged, desperate and broken in morale," Noble continued.

Points to Germany

"Upon the wreckage of families, upon weariness bred when a livelihood seems impossible to obtain, dictatorship has gained its foothold. This was true in Germany, where economic stress cut so deeply that the German people accepted a Hitler; it has been true in many of the countries of the Old World.

The lesson is clear for the people of America . . . our men and women are better informed today of world events than ever before; they are more cognizant that American democracy must endure."

Mrs. Charles A. Goldsmith, vice chairman of the Advance Gifts Unit, reported her group had received 57 gifts totaling $84,325.

The Government Unit has received funds of $70,687 from 10,197. Augustus E. Giegengack, public printer, stated, while group solicitation has brought in $20,946 from 984 contributors, Charles W. O'Donnell declared.

29 AGENCIES 100%

In the Metropolitan Unit, Mrs. Howard G. Nichols, chairman of Area 1, told the solicitors, 818 givers have contributed $17,511 and the Capital Unit has received $843 from 108 contributors.

Twenty-nine Federal and District agencies contributing through the Government unit already have reached 100 per cent or more of their quotas, Giegengack stated.

He called attention to the record of the Chief Clerk's Division, Office of the Treasurer of the United States, which turned in 213.44 per cent of its quota.

Far Over the Top

Others which went far "over the top" were the Administrative Division, Tariff Commission, 182.42 per cent; Investment Trust Study, Securities and Exchange Commission, 179.69; Security Loans, Board of Governors, Federal Reserve System, 163.33 per cent; Classification Committee, Veterans Administration, 166.04; Administrator's Office, Office of the Executive, Veterans Administration, 141.34 per cent; Northeastern Branch, Public Library, 141.04 per cent and National Capital Park and Planning Commission, 130.65 per cent.

Also at the speakers table were the Rev. Ronald Fannon, of Sacred Heart Catholic Church; W. T. Bartel, secretary, Interstate Commerce Commission, and Coleman Jennings, president, and Herbert L. Willett, jr., director of the Community Chest.

It was voted to appoint a planning development committee to investigate zoning and civic improvements projects. J. D. Draper was appointed to represent the association at a meeting of the trustees of the Silver Spring Library on Monday. Plans for a new library will be discussed.

Girl, 17, Slays Angry Father

Clarksville, Tex., Nov. 9 (AP).—Seventeen-year-old Sallie Smith killed her father, T. E. Smith, 41, with two blasts from a shotgun after he threatened her and other members of the family, Sheriff J. N. Geer said today.

Sheriff Geer said Smith, who went with the family into a pasture yesterday to feed stock, became incensed and started beating his family with a stick, threatening to shoot them and burn their house. The girl ran to the house for a gun and shot her father as he stepped up on the front porch. The sheriff said no charges would be filed.

Communists Beaten at Rally

Detroit, Nov. 9 (INS).—A crowd of 200 men, described as veterans of the World War, tonight attacked and beat Communists who had attended a mass meeting at Finnish Hall to hear William Z. Foster, several times Communist candidate for President.

The men picketed the hall all during the meeting and attacked the Communists as they left. A police detachment of 30 was rushed to the hall. No arrests were made.

Slain Turfman TippedOff FBI, Police Imply

Memoranda Found; Hunt 'Finger Man' Who Guided Killers

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 9.—An order went out to policemen today to find the "finger man" in the assassination of Edward J. O'Hare, nationally known turfman.

From what they described as "a thousand possible angles" to the case, authorities turned their attention to a theory that O'Hare was shot to death by imported criminals who needed to have him pointed out before they started shooting.

Lieut. Thomas Kelly, of the State's Attorney's office said investigators had a good description of a man who was observed sitting in a car outside Sportsman's Park race track yesterday.

O'Hare, wealthy operator of dog and horse racing tracks, was slain in typical gangster fashion.

The victim raced his expensive automobile northeast toward the loop apparently knowing he was marked for death. His car smashed into a pole when he turned into a side street. The assassins then slowed almost to a stop and fired two shotgun charges.

An unfired pistol lay on the seat of O'Hare's car. A crucifix, a rosary and a religious medallion in a box marked "happy birthday" were among the effects found in his pockets.

Investigators reported they also found a memorandum which indicated O'Hare recently had been in touch with the Federal Bureau of Investigation. This led to a theory that the underworld may have suspected him of having given information to the FBI. The FBI refused to comment.

Wire Service Cut, Bookies Still Active

Chicago Betters Get Track Results From Mysterious Sources

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Wires linking the Nation-wide racing news system to Illinois betting rooms were cut off today—but bookmakers continued business without the service.

Promptly at noon leased lines connecting the Chicago bureau of M. L. Annenberg's turf information network and an estimated 1,000 customers were broken by the Illinois Bell Telephone Co.

Subsequent newspaper surveys of handbook shops indicated the majority of the proprietors were determined to operate indefinitely despite difficulty in obtaining reasonably prompt race results.

At one place, patrons listened to names of entries and current odds. At 11:59 a. m. the voice, carried from the local office of the Nation-wide organization over a telephone line to a loudspeaker in the betting room, spoke a valedictory, "Will be back later." But it was heard no more.

Seventeen minutes of silence ensued. Then another voice came in over another amplifier, with the results and prices in the first event at Narragansett. Whence it came—or how—went unexplained.

At other houses the winners were posted 10 or 15 minutes later than usual.

There were reports that some horse-playing parlors received race results over short-wave radios or from runners who obtained the data from some mysterious agency.

Many betters joined in the refrain, "The Thrill Is Gone."

It was the general impression that the amount wagered in Chicago—calculated in round figures at $4,000,000 or more a day—would be halved.

Ex-Showgirl's Insanity Hides Fate of Crater

Her Mind Plumbed In Vain for Clew In Disappearance

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 9.—The distorted mind of a former Broadway showgirl was plumbed in vain today for a clew to the fantastic disappearance nine years ago of State Supreme Court Justice Joseph Force Crater.

Crater is said to have visited the girl's Manhattan apartment just before he dropped from sight.

After interviewing June Brice in the Brentwood State Hospital in the presence of psychiatric authorities, counsel for the judge's widow declared the former showgirl's mind was "completely gone."

But he did not give up hope of solving Manhattan's most engaging riddle.

He said an application would be made in Supreme Court tomorrow for permission to open five or six trunks belonging to Miss Brice and to see her records at the Brentwood, Bellevue and Ward's Island Hospitals.

The attorney, Emil K. Ellis, represents the remarried widow, Mrs. Stella Krater Kunz, in seeking double insurance indemnity of $50,000 on the ground that Crater died by "external, violent or accidental means."

"Miss Brice stared blankly at a picture of the judge when I showed it to her," Ellis said after the disappointing hospital interview. "She rambled incoherently and is in an advanced state of dementia praecox.

"She used legal phrases and talked of being a witness. At one time she said, 'One shouldn't write anything to explain anything.' But nothing she said was of value."

There was one ray of hope, but it flickered out.

"When I showed her one of her own pictures at the time the judge disappeared," Ellis said, "she seemed to recognize it just for a moment, saying 'that was a pretty pose of me.'"

Parents Attend School, Follow Pupils' Routine

Nearly 200 parents sat in their children's classrooms yesterday at the Takoma Park-Silver Spring (Md.) Junior High School and went through the pupils' daily routine. They were members of the Parent-Teacher Association.

The session was dedicated to national education week. The parents went to each classroom, sat at the desks and heard the faculty discuss the studies of their children.

Kenneth Craglow, association president, announced last night that 1,200 tickets hae been sold for the "The Milky Way," a three-act comedy, which will be presented by the faculty November 16, 17 and 18. Since the association expects to sell 2,000 tickets, it was voted to hold the play over an extra day.

War to Create 500,000 Jobs

New York, Nov. 9 (U.P.).—Wartime spending will result in the re-employment of only 500,000 of this Nation's 9,000,000 unemployed, Federal Works Administrator John M. Carmody said tonight.

Speaking on the Town Hall of the Air program, through the facilities of the NBC, he warned the Nation not to be overoptimistic regarding potential benefits to American industry as a result of the European conflict.

Farmers Who Swapped Wives Too Soon Guilty of Bigamy

Didn't Wait for Divorce to Take Effect; One Husband Tossed in Mule and Land To Get His Freedom, Wife Says

By the Associated Press

Russellville, Ala., Nov. 9.—Two men and a woman were convicted tonight of bigamy in a rural wife-swapping case that began with illicit love and led to exchange of children, land and a mule.

A jury of 12 men, after an hour and a half deliberation, convicted Will D. Johnson, 36; Odell Brand, 32, and Mrs. Della Brand, 29.

Mrs. Annie Fay Johnson pleaded guilty at the start of the trial and testified for the State.

The State charged the four committed bigamy by trading mates and remarrying a few hours after the women obtained divorce decrees which forbade remarriage within 60 days.

Judge C. P. Almon, of Franklin circuit court, was expected to pass sentence tomorrow. Bigamy in Alabama is punishable by two to five years imprisonment.

Mrs. Annie Fay Johnson, who said she and Mrs. Brand swapped mates for a night before it was legal, also testified she found Johnson and Mrs. Brand in a compromising position in a cornfield months before decrees were granted.

After decrees were obtained last February, the four drove to Fulton, Miss., in Johnson's automobile and were remarried.

Mrs. Johnson said her husband, well-to-do farmer, gave her title to 270 acres of land and a mule in return for a divorce so he could marry Mrs. Brand. After the divorces, Johnson received custody of two of the five Brand children and his own two children, Mrs. Johnson said, while she and Brand received three of the Brand children.

The governor made his appeal on the eve of the ruling by the Michigan unemployment compensation commission on the claims of more than 50,000 Chrysler workers.

Spokesmen for the U. A. W.-C. I. O. and the company continued their conferences today with James F. Dewey, Federal labor conciliator.

Britain's Traffic Toll Exceeds Allies' Losses

London, Nov. 9 (U.P.).—More persons (1,130) have been killed in highway accidents in Britain since the start of the war than the Allies have lost in action on the Western Front, Minister of Transport D. Euan Wallace told the House of Commons today.

He attributed most of the fatalities to the blackouts. Experiments are being made to improve street lighting, he said.

Labor Chiefs May Ignore Peace Pleas

No Immediate Effort To Iron Out Troubles Appears Likely

By Felix Cotten.

Despite new appeals by President Roosevelt, it appeared yesterday that no immediate effort would be made by leaders of the Nation's two big labor factions to sit down around the conference table and iron out their differences.

The President canvassed chances for progress in this direction with William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and John L. Lewis, head of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, who called at the White House yesterday an hour and a half apart.

When Green, the first caller, left, he said Mr. Roosevelt wanted to know when the A. F. L. and C. I. O. could resume peace negotiations, which were broken off last April.

"I told him," Green replied, "that there was no hurdle in the way so far as we were concerned. We are ready to resume negotiations when the peace committee of the C. I. O. is ready to meet with us."

Lewis Reticent

Lewis said it was a safe assumption that labor peace was one of the subjects discussed, but beyond that he was silent. He would not say whether he was willing to resume negotiations or whether any move toward peace would be made.

Informed that Green had said the President wanted to know when negotiations could be resumed, Lewis remarked:

"It is characteristic of Mr. Green to talk that way."

Asked whether he would meet in the next few days with other members of the C.I.O. peace negotiating committee, he replied:

"Don't put your money on that."

Refuses an Opinion

Green mentioned that Lewis was to follow him to the White House and said the President might "persuade" him to resume the peace conferences.

He refused, however, to express an opinion as to whether conferences would be resumed. He left the impression that this would be up to Lewis.

The latter, in response to a question, said it could be assumed that no mention was made, in his talk with the President, of his recent accusation that assistants of Attorney Genneral Murphy and Secretary of Labor Perkins were secretly planning a conference of Western progressives to launch a third trem boom for the President.

Never Resumed

Lewis, in a public statement, had charged that Norman H. Littell, chief of the Justice Department Lands Division, and Marshall E. Dimock, Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, were organizing the conference.

Negotiations for a settlement of labor's factional war were begun last spring at the President's insistence. A. F. L. and C. I. O. committees were appointed and held secret conferences here and in New York. The discussions were interrupted, however, to enable Lewis to negotiate for a new soft coal labor contract. They have never been resumed.

Mr. Roosevelt, however, sent personal messages to both the A. F. L. and C. I. O. conventions in October asking them to renew negotiations.

Since peace negotiations were interrupted, Green and Lewis have attacked each other publicly, and last August Lewis said that peace was "impossible." He is reported to have told the recent C. I. O. convention that in five years he will have assembled, "like a conqueror of old," a dues-paying membership of 10,000,000.

Both Drive for Members

Recently, both the A. F. of L. and C. I. O. have renewed their competitive membership campaigns.

C. I. O. officials insisted yesterday that peace virtually was out of the question, due to the A. F. of L. demand that the C. I. O. disband as a separate entity and surrender the whole industrial union movement to the pleasure of A. F. of L. craft union leaders.

A. F. of L. officials, on the other hand, said Lewis, did not want peace. Moreover, they declared, he does not want to resume negotiations, since if he did he might have to make concessions in the interest of peace which he does not want to make.

Union Waives Truck Jurisdiction

An interunion dispute within the A. F. of L., which has seriously impeded the District's public buildings program, seemed to be settled yesterday.

John Possehl, president of the International Union of Operating Engineers, issued a formal statement disclaiming jurisdiction over drivers of concrete mixer trucks.

Conflict between the engineers and teamsters unions over this work resulted in a city-wide strike last month which delayed construction of the Census, Social Security Board and other Federal buildings.

Possehl said his organization "does not claim and never has claimed" jurisdiction over the mixer truck drivers. His statement was directed to William L. Hutcheson, chairman of a special committee named by the A. F. of L. building and construction trades department to solve the dispute.

Hutcheson's committee ruled last month that "any and all power-driven equipment that has been in dispute between the teamsters and engineers "should be awarded to the engineers."

The controversy, with its resultant strike, had such a severe effect on Federal building construction that one international and several local representatives of the teamsters' organization were indicted last month for alleged violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

CHILDREN'S Frequent COLDS

✓ For relieving discomforts of chest colds and night coughs, rub VapoRub on throat, chest, and back at bedtime. VapoRub's poultice-vapor action relieves congestion of upper air passages—eases soreness of chest and back muscles—helps the youngster relax into healing sleep.

✓ For coughing and irritated throat caused by colds, put VapoRub on the child's tongue to relieve the irritation. Then massage VapoRub on throat and chest.

✓ For "sniffles" and misery of head colds, melt VapoRub in a bowl of boiling water. Have the child breathe in the steaming vapors. This loosens phlegm, clears air passages, makes breathing easier. Also massage VapoRub on throat and chest. Millions of families use these three time-tested treatments.

Adams Urges Bonds to Solve Debt Dilemma

Let Congress Worry, Morgenthau Says, as Spending Nears Limit

A demand that Congress "resume the borrowing authority it delegated to the Treasury" last night followed a Treasury statement that the future of the Federal debt ceiling is "purely a matter up to Congress."

A few hours after Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau told reporters the debt limit is "Congress' worry," Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, proposed a new formula for Congressional control of the Federal debt.

Adams, a member of the Senate Banking Committee, urged that Congress make a separate and specific authorization for any bond issues over and above the statutory debt ceiling of $45,000,000,000.

Sees No Need to Lift Limit

"It is not necessary to pass a bill lifting the debt limit," said Adams. "Anyway, it is a limit on Mr. Morgenthau and not on Congress. Congress has the borrowing authority and it should assert it. If we near the existing limitation, Congress should authorize what additional bond issues are necessary and hold borrowings to that."

The Federal debt yesterday reached $41,168,071,490, just $3,831,928,510 short of the statutory debt limitation. A substantial excess of spending over revenues in the remainder of this fiscal year could carry the debt past the legal ceiling next session.

Asked if he would ask Congress to increase the legal limit by $5,000,000,000, $10,000,000,000 or $15,000,000,000, Morgenthau replied:

"It all depends on Congress. I am just paymaster, that's all. They pass the bills, appropriate the money, and I pay the bills and raise the money to pay them."

The Treasury Chief told reporters he did not think either he or the President would ask Congress to lift the limit.

"That's Congress' Worry"

Asked if an increase would not be necessary, Morgenthau said:

"Well, every day we get that much closer to the limit, but I figure that's Congress' worry, not mine. I'm not worrying about it."

A reporter wanted to know if Morgenthau hoped for an increase if Congress appropriated money above the limit.

"I hope Congress will keep it regular and legal," replied Morgenthau. "I'm not going to draw checks one penny over the regular authority I've got."

After proposing that Congress retain close control of future Federal borrowings, Senator Adams, who, as chairman of the Senate deficiencies appropriations subcommittee, has been a leading exponent of Federal economies, said relief spending next session can be substantially cut.

With continued business improvement, Adams said the relief load should not be as heavy and relief appropriations should be cut down to $1,000,000,000 from the $1,425,000,000 voted last year. He said his $1,000,000,000 estimate was based on a relief load of 1,500,000 persons.

Adams said he thought National defense appropriations should be held to the level of last session's.

Newsboy of Lincoln Era Here to Hike 400 Miles

Natick, Mass., Nov. 9 (AP).—A hitch-hiking expedition of more than 400 miles from here to Baltimore confronted Joshua Williams, colored, who said he was 99 years old, as he set out today to collect his old-age pension and settle down.

Williams, who was given a night's lodging in a police cell, told authorities he was a newsboy in Washington when Lincoln was President and that in his late years he "covered" most of the country hitch-hiking.

Bartram's stepdaughter, June, told Prosecuting Attorney Paul D. Michel that he was suffering from silicosis. Axthelm returned a verdict of murder and suicide.

Oumansky Lands in N.Y.; Riled by Press

Ambassador Sputters When Asked if He Belonged to OGPU

By William S. White,
Associated Press Staff Writer.

Ambassador Oumansky, of Russia, arrived in Washington last night, but declined to discuss the European war or other "political subjects." He had been in Russia for several months. The Ambassador was greeted at the station by members of the embassy staff.

New York, Nov. 9.—Constantin A. Oumansky, Soviet Ambassador to the United States, returned to America today fuming and sputtering—all because the shipnews reporters asked him a question he didn't care to answer.

Oumansky arrived aboard the Italian liner Rex, en route to resume his ambassadorial duties in Washington.

When questioned about a magazine article which charged that the envoy at one time served as a member of the OGPU (Soviet secret police), he exclaimed:

"No! No! I never was a member!" And then he asked, "What is the OGPU?"

Informed that the initials were those of the Soviet secret police organization, Oumansky flushed and said:

"It is not compatible with my dignity to discuss such things. You gentlemen are unfair to question me about things I know nothing about. I will make no political statements."

Rumors that former Soviet Ambassador Troyanovsky had been "purged" following his return to Russia were denied by Ambassador Oumansky, who said he had seen the former envoy in Moscow.

4 Irish Rebels Near Death in Hunger Strike

De Valera Refuses To Free Prisoners, Appealing to Dail

By Hugh Smith.

Copyright by New York Times.

Dublin, Nov. 9.—Eire, which is in the midst of economic troubles caused by the war, tonight was faced with the prospect of the deaths of four young Republicans on a hunger strike as a challenge to the government to force their release.

Patrick McGrath, Dublin Irish Republican army leader, with three of his comrades went on a hunger strike 28 days ago.

Tonight their lives hang in the balance and Premier De Valera regarded the situation as so serious that a budget debate in the Dail Eireann was interrupted to hear his statement.

Shows Deep Emotion

Speaking with deep emotion, he told the House that the four prisoners "are in imminent danger of death."

"The government's attitude is this," the premier went on with a note of determination in his voice, "there are no powers by which we can secure the safety of the people here except the powers of arrest and detention of those in a position to bring this country to disaster. The policy of a hunger strike is aimed at taking away those means from the government.

"Once those means are taken away it is obvious what is going to happen. You are going to have disorganization to such an extent that the only way in which the supremacy of the people can be established is by arms. We know perfectly well that if arms have to be used many lives are going to be lost. The only way to prevent this is to restrain those bound on courses leading to disaster."

"We all know," said the premier to the silent, tense chamber, "there is a body in this country with arms at its disposal. We know that within the past year their activities have taken a new turn and that this body has definitely proclaimed itself as entitled to exercise the powers of government, to act in the name of our people even to the extent of committing the people to war.

"We are passing through a time of peril, with war being waged around us. We have seen comparatively large nations lose their freedom. Is the government of this country to be deprived of the only power it has to prevent these things taking place here?"

House Is Silent

"I have prayed," he continued, "that these men might change their minds and realize what our obligations are. If we let them out we will be faced with others hunger striking to secure their release."

For several moments after Premier De Valera resumed his seat there was a deep silence. Not even the Labor Party, which asked the government by resolution to release the hunger strikers, ventured to question the premier.

Nation's Farmers Strike Pay Dirt

American farmers received cash income of $847,000,000 in September, bringing their total for the first nine months of this year to $5,441,000,000.

These estimates, by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics yesterday, compared with an income of $745,000,000 in September last year and $5,357,000,000 for the corresponding nine-month period.

The September and January-September, respectiely, farm incomes by States included

Maryland, $4,592,000 and $49,199,000; Virginia, $7,668,000 and $62,207,000; North Carolina, $19,420,000 and $93,000,000.

No Great Business Growth Seen for Year

With a "lull" in overseas fighting, no great expansion of business can be expected for at least a year, Dr. Mordecai Ezekiel, economic advisor to the Department of Agriculture, said last night.

Although the recent acceleration in industry has boomed business to the 1926 level, heavy stocks must be exhausted before a new expansion. War time activity can be expected to put back to work little over 1,000,000 of the present 9,000,000 unemployed, Ezekiel added.

Netherlands 'Water-Line' Regions

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Around Utrecht (1.) and Lent and Nijmegen (2.)—the "water line" area in the Netherlands first line of defense—were evacuated yesterday as Holland began inundation of a line through the center of the country. From Brussels (3.) Belgium sped troops northward apparently to bolster defenses. At Venlo (Venloo) two persons, one a Dutch citizen, were reported killed situation seems to have taken place since the more optimistic views expressed early in the evening. Well-informed circles this morning consider danger imminent.

Meanwhile, anxiety is increasing here and reports from the frontier towns of Enschede and Hengelo state that trains are ready to evacuate the population. The German frontier is being closed tonight for the first time since it was closed for a few days during mobilization in September. Banks have forwarded gold to the west behind the water-line. New areas of the Province of Utrecht are being inundated.

Leaves Stopped

[An official] announcement at The Hague, according to the Associated Press, said that all Netherlands army leaves had been canceled, putting 50,000 men back under arms. Belgium had stepped up her forces from 500,000 to 600,000 troops.

[Most of rural Utrecht was inundated. An additional area was flooded between the Maas and Waal rivers, so that water protected Amsterdam, Rotterdam, The Hague and the northwest industrial centers.

[Official explanation of the extraordinary military measures was lacking, but informed sources insisted Belgium and the Netherlands still believed their neutrality would be respected despite reports of German troop concentrations near their borders.—Editor's note.]

Meanwhile, Premier Hendryk Colijn's paper maintains there is not a single reason for concern since the government is taking all precautions. The government press service is unable to keep up with denying the reports of the border clash which are being rushed out of Holland by the hosts of newspapermen massed in the Amsterdam hotels. At 12:30 a. m. the cabinet published the following statement:

"Last night a shooting occurred on the frontier near Blerick. Several civilians were involved. It appears one was hit while the others were abducted into Germany. The facts are not yet established and the witnesses are contradictory. The inquiry is being continued."

Among current suppositions the most likely is that Germans trying to flee were helped by Dutchmen who were kidnaped by custom officers. The least likely and most exciting is that British agents from Holland were dragged into Germany.

One of the uniformed Germans fired 50 shots at random, scattering onlookers, reported the best-informed spokesman at The Hague. He said at 1 p. m.: "We do not expect anything to happen tonight. The world's attention is being focussed here and the simplest precautions are being exaggerated into catastrophic proportions. I am going to sleep better than ever and so are the ministers."

Nazis Reported Massing

Amsterdam, Nov. 9 (INS).—Reports from foreign quarters that heavy masses of German cavalry and military supplies were being concentrated along the Dutch and Belgian borders greatly intensified the feeling of uneasiness in these two neutral countries tonight.

Well-informed sources in London reported that German cavalry was massing in new concentrations along the Dutch border, and stated that gasoline and oil supplies are being hurried up from the interior of the Reich to that same sector.

Paris military circles also reported the concentration of Nazi cavalry and supplies along the Belgian-Netherlands frontier.

Writer 'Startles' Dies Committee At New Orleans

New Orleans, Nov 9 (U.P.).—A reporter made such "startling" disclosures tonight at a closed session of the House Committee investigating un-American activities that Robert E. Stripling, secretary of the committee, announced for Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas, that open hearings would be necessary here.

Pierre Villere, of the New Orleans Tribune, who offered the testimony, covered the slaying of Philip Carey, National Maritime Union official. William C. McCulstion, former N. M. U. official, has been charged with having a hand in the slaying and was arrested while testifying in Washington.

George Duffy and Clarence Applewhite, former officials of the N. M. U., followed Villere on the witness stand, but their testimony was unavailable.

Chamberlain Sees No Hope Of Peace Now

Force Only Speech Nazis Know, He Says, Pledges Finish Fight

tribution to the monumental literature accumulating in the international debate raging between the Allies and Germany over who started "this strangest of wars." It contributed little that was new to the forensics of war guilt.

Force to Speak

Chamberlain insisted that it was the "stiff-necked men to whom Germany has handed over guidance of her destinies" who were to blame for the war and he insisted that "upon them must lie the responsibility for the consequences."

Force, he said, was the only answer to those who knew no other language and since Britain had been forced to take up arms because the German government did not share the British desire for peace, the sword would not be sheathed "until we are assured that Europe has been freed from the threats which so long have paralyzed the life of her peoples."

Only a year ago, Chamberlain said, he held hope that the country might be spared the ordeal of war, but the Nazis "would be satisfied with nothing less than that forcible attainment of their desires which they had so successfully tried before."

Commenting on the offer of mediation from King Leopold and Queen Wilhelmina, the Prime Minister, while outspokenly admitting he feared it was a bootless gesture, nevertheless expressed appreciation of their "lofty motives." This part of the speech was read to Commons by Sir Samuel Hoare, Lord Privy Seal, in reply to a question from Maj. Clement Atlee, leader of the Labor opposition. In his speech Chamberlain said:

"In due course it will be the duty of the government to tender to His Majesty our advice as to the nature of the reply we should make, but before we can do so it will naturally be necessary for us to consult with the dominions and our friends and allies, who are standing shoulder to shoulder with us in this struggle.

"Meanwhile, I'd like to make a few observations upon this strangest of wars, which, in the form wherein it has hitherto been waged, must seem to many who remember the 1914-18 conflict to be no war at all, but rather a state of siege. We do not know how long this phase will last, or whether at any moment it may not be changed into violent conflict.

Sees Allies Strengthened

"But we can see, at any rate, that the position of the Allies has, as the weeks have gone by, rather strengthened than deteriorated. The treaty we and our French allies have concluded with Turkey will be a powerful instrument for peace in southeastern Europe.

"On the other hand, the pact between Germany and the Soviet Union has gained indeed great advantages for the Soviet, but has brought only humiliation and loss for Germany. Repeal of the neutrality act in the United States is a momentous event, for while it affords America means of maintaining her neutrality, it reopens for the Allies the doors of the greatest storehouse of supplies in the world."

The prime minister said the nation should have no cause for regret that "until now there has been no major battle and we are able still to continue strengthening our defensive and offensive power." While losses have been sustained, Chamberlain said, he was thankful that successes in hunting down submarines and conflicts in the air have been "unclouded by the terrible casualty lists" of the last war.

It was only natural that lacking excitement of great events people should complain about the restrictions and controls imposed by the government in preparing for the worst. He pleaded "not for total abstention from criticism but for a reasonable amount of tolerance" and for a more generous recognition of the good work already done.

Strict Use of Present Laws Would Smash Drug Traffic

prison stops between, it will be impossible to eradicate the drug evil."

Cooperation and harmony were never greater among the police department and Bureau of Narcotics, which uncover and apprehend the violators, and the U. S. Attorney's office, which prosecutes them. That statement is no broad generalization. It is based on first hand investigation.

Present Laws Would Suffice if Enforced

Present statutes are adequate to deal with the rising tide of drug selling and addiction in the Nation's Capital. The Harrison act of 1914 and the Narcotic Drugs Import and Export act of 1922 are the teeth of the Federal Government in its ceaseless war against dope. In addition, there have been passed within the last two years laws strengthening coordinating machinery between local and Federal authorities and providing stricter penalties for peddlers who are "repeaters."

The "double-to-triple" penalty law is employed in other jurisdictions but has never been used in the District, though narcotics repeaters are as numerous here as anywhere. For that matter, say the Federal officials, it probably wouldn't be necessary to invoke this new statute very often if the punishment provisions of the two basic control acts were adequately exercised here.

The mere possession of illegal narcotics on the first offense could bring a maximum sentence of 15 years. Possession plus sale is punishable by a 20-year maximum term. Obviously, if more severe handling of drug peddlers is the answer to the acute local problem, this end may be achieved under the older laws and without resorting to the "double penalty" statute.

Last Friday a drug law violator came up for sentencing in the court of Justice Peyton Gordon after having pleaded guilty. He had been convicted twice before of similar charges and served time. His punishment for the third offense was a 1-to-2-year sentence and a $25 fine.

Pine's Order for Severity Nullified in Courts

Because the United States Attorney's office cannot afford to antagonize the courts, it cannot express itself publicly on such queer sentences as the one mentioned above. Its feelings, however, are reflected in the memorandum which District Attorney Pine sent to all his assistants on September 6.

"I assume that you have noticed the substantial increase in narcotics cases during the last six months," he said.

"The agents of the Narcotics Bureau reported last spring that a large number of the serious crimes could not be attributed to the use of narcotics. The Criminal Justice Association has come to the same conclusion.

"At the judicial conference of the Fourth circuit last June, I made some inquiry about narcotics cases in adjoining States and came to the conclusion that the problem is more acute here than in the adjoining States. The agents of the Narcotics Bureau gave me the same information last spring.

"I believe this is attributable to the fact that peddlers believe Washington is a 'soft' spot."

"Please bear these facts in mind in connection with any narcotics cases which are assigned to you for trial or presentation to the grand jury and handle them uncompromisingly and with severity. This is particularly necessary in connection with peddlers."

"I want the word to go out by our conduct in these cases that the percentages for the dope peddlers are not favorable in the District of Columbia!"

Nobly spoken but rather impotent as long as the courts continue to look upon trafficking in human misery as a crime meriting punishment no greater than that given the auto thief or the habitual drunkard.

Italy Expresses Horror at Plot On Hitler's Life

Mussolini and King Congratulate Fuehrer Over His Escape

Copyright by New York Times.

Rome, Nov. 9.—The attempt against the life of Adolf Hitler has been received here in official circles and by the Italian press with expressions of sympathy for the Fuehrer and profound horror against what all commentators call "the odious plot." King Victor Emmanuel and Premier Mussolini immediately sent messages of congratulations to the Fuehrer on his escape, while Ettore Muti, secretary general of the Fascist Party, similarly felicitated Rudolf Hess, deputy Nazi Party leader.

"The indignation of the German people against the hateful plot finds an echo of profound and heartfelt solidarity in Italy," writes the Messaggero. "To those Brown Shirts, victims of the odious crime, the Italian people and Blackshirts send a moving salute and their reverent thought."

Duce Calls Plot "Odious"

Mussolini expressed "the feeling of profound indignation of the government and Italian people and condolence for the victims who were your faithful followers from the earliest days. In my name, personally, and that of Fascist Italy, I send you the expression of my fervent happiness at escaping the danger of the odious attempt which cannot split the unity of the German people around you in your regime."

It is a curious coincidence that these expressions of solidarity, which are the warmest which Germany has received since the war started, should have come immediately after a speech in which Hitler never once mentioned Italy, although there was a friendly allusion to Russia. This is probably the first public speech which Hitler has made since the Axis was formed in which he did not refer to Italy.

Gayda Softens Attitude

Just to add to the confusion, the Italian press is evidently calling off its campaign against Russia, for Virginio Gayda, well-known Fascist editor, warned commentators abroad not to make too much of what he said the other day. In fact, he says, his newspaper would never have written anything if it had not been for the Comintern's manifesto. "When Italy is insulted, she replies," Gayda continued. "Therefore, that whole episode turns out to have been an angry flurry which has now ended. It does not represent a change, or even a stiffening in Italy's attitude. She still opposes Russian penetration into the Balkans, but the diplomatic amenities are going to be observed."

Treasury to Mail 5 Billions in Gold

By the Associated Press

The Treasury is getting ready to mail $5,000,000,000 or $6,000,000,000 worth of gold.

As soon as Congress authorizes the postage (about $1,000,000) the Treasury wants to shift part of its huge gold hoards from New York and Philadelphia to the subterranean vaults built for the purpose at Fort Knox, Ky.

Fort Knox already contains $5,523,000,000 worth of the metal, but none has been added for a couple of years, while the Treasury stocks outside of Fort Knox have grown to exceed $11,600,000,000. Shifting some of the gold would relieve congestion in outside vaults and at the same time increase its safety.

When the Treasury sends gold by registered mail the extra postage compensates the Postoffice for guarding the gold with hundreds of inspectors and soldiers.

Survey Ordered to Learn if Change Would Cut Costs and in the distribution system would require alterations.

At present the company uses between 30 and 40 per cent natural gas as a mixture with the manufactured product at the local plants. The complete substitution of natural gas has been debated by members of the commission for many years and was brought into prominence at the recent hearing of the company's petition to acquire the Hyattsville and Alexandria companies.

Should the survey show that economies in the operation of the company would result from the use of natural gas and that the savings could be passed on to the consumers, it is expected the commission would approve the change.

However, many problems relative to the use of the natural product will be considered by the investigators. Some of the problems listed by officials are

The adequacy and permanence of the source of supply of natural gas.

The adequacy and dependability of transmission systems.

What adjustments would be necessary in present gas appliances owned by consumers.

Feasibility of dismantling existing manufacturing plants here, in whole or in part, and whether it would be necessary to continue the operation of the present plants in case of failure of the transmission systems.

Sperry in his statement declared the company has been making a careful study of the problem and that it was one of "great intricacy, involving many physical, economic, operating and other factors."

No Supply in Sight

"If an adequate or certain supply of natural gas were available at a price which would mean savings to consumers and still maintain the company's financial stability and service, other difficulties might be attacked," he said.

But under present conditions the answer is not even that easy because the essential supply at the necessary price has not been revealed, he said.

The company has two flexible sources of supply—the gas manufactured in Washington and the natural gas. This combination is one of the factors which enables the company to attain a low cost for producing gas, and consequently distribute to its consumers at the lowest rates on the Atlantic seaboard, Sperry said.

For some 80 years local gas consumers have suffered no serious interruption to service, he stated. A complete changeover to natural gas would swing the National Capital on the end of a single 350-mile pipe line subject to breakage, the president stated.

Sperry said, however, his company would cooperate "to the fullest" with the commission to the end that the information obtained may be complete.

Hearing Planned

Commission officials would not comment on the matter except to state the survey would answer all questions. They plan, however, to hold a public hearing at the completion of the survey which is expected to take at least two months.

Under the provisions of the District utilities act, cost of the investigations are assessed against the company.

In the order, the commission said neither it nor the company has adequate knowledge as to the feasibility or economic effect of greater or complete substitution of natural gas by the operating company in relation to service or rates.

Board Meets Here On Historic Sites

The advisory board on national park historic sites was entertained yesterday at the home of the late Larz Anderson, 2218 Massachusetts avenue northwest, now a museum of the Society of the Cincinnati. The board was asked to the meeting by Maj. Gist Blair, one of its members and a regent of the society.

For the past three days, Maj. Blair said, the board has studied sites of French and Spanish occupancy in America in the Seventeenth Century. It will recommend to Secretary Ickes sites of sufficient historical significance to be preserved by the Government.

Ponder Transfer of U. S. Ships

minor one, it raised for the first time the question of permitting disposal of American ships to a warring power. The Maritime Commission, charged with building up the American merchant marine both as a peace-time national asset and as a defensive auxiliary in wartime, must pass on the application.

The trawling company said the five coal-burning craft, built in 1919 and 1920, were offered for sale because they were not profitable when operated in competition with Diesel-engine trawlers.

Favor Selling Old Ships

The United States merchant marine is now undergoing a rehabilitation program, with 500 ships scheduled to be constructed in the next ten years. The Maritime Commission would like to see American companies sell their older vessels to Britain and France as these new ships become available.

In the World War days the United States had no merchant marine to speak of, so that it was the Scandinavian countries that prospered by unloading their old vessels on the Allies.

The 106 ships listed by the Maritime Commission as being sold to foreigners or transferred to foreign registry, according to the Maritime Commission list, went to a dozen or more countries, including England, Canada, Newfoundland, France, Italy, Norway, Yugoslavia, Mexico, the Philippines, Venezuela, Colombia, Honduras and Panama.

The United Fruit Steamship Corporation, which has a large number of ships flying under foreign flags, transferred two to Honduran registry last month. They were the Tanamo and Sagua, each of slightly more than 3,000 tons.

The largest ship to be transferred to foreign registry since the war started was the President Madison, 14,000-ton liner built in 1921. Its sale was approved in the last week or so. The owner was listed as Harry E. Warner, trustee of the American Mail Line, and the purchaser as Jose Cojuangco, Philippine Islands.

Panama, judging from the Maritime Commission list, is a favorite country with ship owners that want to fly a flag other than the Stars and Stripes, 21 of the 106 ships going to her, while Canada obtained 17 and Brazil and Great Britain 16 each.

The Grace Line transferred two small freighters to Panama registry in October, and in the same month the commission approved the sale of the 4,000-ton Point Estero by Swayne & Hoyt, Inc., to A. G. Pappadakis, a Greek citizen residing in New York, who registered the ship in Panama. Whether the Point Estero will now travel through European combat zones is a question left unanswered in the Maritime Commission's statement.

The plight of unemployed American seamen was taken up yesterday as the President talked to William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and John L. Lewis, head of the Congress of Industrial Organization. Today he is scheduled, to confer with Joseph Curran, president of the C. I. O.'s National Maritime Union, and Joseph R. Ryan, president of the A. F. of L.'s International Longshoremen's Association.

Curran Protests

Curran has protested vehemently against the proposal to transfer the eight United States Lines vessels to Panama registry, pointing out that 1,000 American seamen would be supplanted by foreigners. John M. Franklin, president of the line, has retorted that the Americans would remain idle anyway, since the ships cannot travel through European combat zones under the American flag.

Ryan has approved the transfer because the ships would still load and unload in New York, thereby giving his longshoremen work.

Admiral Land was accompanied to the White House by Robert W. Bruere, chairman of the Maritime Labor Board, and he told reporters afterward that they had discussed maritime labor problems.

Predicts Complete Tieup

New York, Nov. 9 (AP).—After an all-day conference of union delegates from Virginia to Maine, Joseph P. Ryan, president of the International Longshoremen's Association (A. F. of L.), predicted tonight "that by the end of the week there will be "no coastwise ships operating in any port on the North Atlantic."

About 5,000 longshoremen here have been on strike a week following a breakdown in negotiations over wage increases. Out-of-town delegates pledged support to the walkout, Ryan said, and left for home with plans to call out their men. This action, he said, would add 15,000 men to the striking total.

Joseph Curran, president of the National Maritime Union (C. I. O.), today accused American shipping operators of importing 1,500 Scandinavian seamen on the theory that they might be used to man American ships if the owners could transfer them to foreign registry.

Curran said he had telegraphed to the Department of Labor and to the Swedish, Norwegian and Danish ministers.

Bailey Urges Relief for Ship Owners, Men

Lines and Crews Are Victims of Neutrality, Senator Declares

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Legislation for relief of both operators and crews of American ships laid up by neutrality act restrictions on shipping was called for yesterday by Chairman Josiah W. Bailey, of the Senate Commerce Committee.

"After consulation with the Maritime Commission, and probably with the President, I shall be prepared to submit appropriate legislation to my committee early next session," said the North Carolina Senator.

Suggests Program.

Bailey, who led the Congressional move to modify the bill's original drastic ship curbs, said details of proposed relief measures have not been formulated, but suggested:

That operators of the approximately 60 ships he said would be tied up be voted "damages" by Congress.

That crews thrown out of work when their ships are laid up be provided for "and not on any WPA basis."

That a moratorium be declared on debts owed the Government on ships put out of operation.

That additional funds be provided to keep the ships from deteriorating at their docks.

Entirely apart from legislation, Bailey declared there is much that can be done to offset a merchant marine setback, such as developing new tourist trade with South America and disposing of old ships to make way for new.

He said there were only a limited number of alternatives to tying the ships up at their docks.

"We've got to buy them or sell them or transfer them to another flag, and anything else would defeat our objective, which is a great merchant marine," said Bailey.

He said it was "entirely possible" that half of the nonoperating ships might be sold to neutrals, and that the Government might purchase and scrap the older of the vessels, paying the operators in credits on new ship construction.

30 May Be Used

Bailey estimated that 30 of the approximately 90 ships affected by the shipping curbs might find new routes in South America and elsewhere. To this end, he said both "men and money must be invested in South America, South American friendship fostered and "its tremendous tourist possibilities developed."

"We have got to learn how to be a creditor nation, and how creditor nation behaves to preserve its trade," he said. "South America hasn't any gold and can't trade beyond its exchange. They can pay us in what they have to sell and we can create new credits there by increasing our tourist trade. While they have defaulted on some of their bonds, their commercial credit is unimpaired, and there is wide opportunity for American investment."

Bailey called both the operators and the crews of vessels displaced by the neutrality act the "victims" of Congressional action and said Congress in equity owed both groups relief.

"We've got to care for their crews," he said. "They are deprived of their right to work by an act of Congress. We must provide for men, and not on WPA either. We owe them more than that."

At the White House, Chairman John L. Lewis, of the C. I. O., and President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, discussed with the President in separate interviews the labor problem created by the neutrality act shipping restrictions.

Lewis said the whole problem was explored "both from the standpoint of public policy and the impact of the program on the maritime labor problem."

Green said the labor problem resulting from the ship ban was "well nigh insoluble." Green said there was little that could be done for the crews of old ships tied up by the restrictions except to extend unemployment relief. He intimated he had told the President as much. He said the old ships affected probably should be junked.

Proposes Moratorium

He said operators deprived of the means of paying back their Government borrowings by loss of their ship trade should be granted a moratorium on debts owed the Government and that the Government in addition should "pay damages." He said he thought many could collect on claims filed with the Congressional claims committees. Where their ships are indefinitely tied up, he said the Government should either provide the means of keeping them in fit operating condition, or, if the ships are old, "buy them in and give credit on new ship construction.

While he said he opposed selling such ships to belligerents, as violating the neutrality act's spirit, he predicted many of the older ships could be sol dto neutrals, and made clear he saw nothing wrong in proposed transfer of ships to foreign flags.

"I think Admiral Land and the Maritime Commission are doing a splendid job and are entitled to our help," he said.

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins earlier called a conference of shipping and tourist executives Monday to consider means of enlarging tourist travel between North and South America.

Hopkins likewise declared that expanded tourist trade with South America would create new business for American ships forced out of European trade and supply Latin Americans with more dollars to purchase American goods.

The Commerce Secretary pointed out that Americans spent $75,000,000 on travel in Europe in 1938, while only $53,000,000 was spent in Latin America. The bulk of the Latin American tourist spending—$44,000,000—went to Mexico.

U. S. Restricted Brazil's Navy, Needed Now, Secret Data Shows

1924 Correspondence Is Published; Hughes Threatened to Call Naval Mission Home if Fleet Was Built

By Hobart C. Montee,
United Press Staff Writer.

The State Department intervened in 1924 to prevent Brazil from constructing a navy which, had it been built, might have been capable today of patrolling that country's sector of the all-America safety zone, hitherto secret correspondence revealed last night.

A volume of official correspondence of the United States foreign relations for the year 1924, made public by the State Department, showed that the then Secretary of State, Charles Evans Hughes, now Chief Justice, bluntly threatened to recall the United States naval mission from Brazil if the Rio de Janeiro government persisted in carrying out a long-term naval construction program.

The program would have given Brazil two new battleships, 15,000 tons of destroyers, 6,000 tons of submarines and 60,000 tons of cruisers.

Disturbed State Department

Hughes instructed the United States charge d'affaires in Brazil to inform the Brazilian minister of marine that this construction was "most disturbing to the (State) Department." Hughes added that "while from a purely technical naval point of view this program may be justifiable, the outlay appears to be exorbitant and out of all proportion to the necessities of a country like Brazil that is menac from no quarter."

The charge d'affaires argued in vain that the proposed building was one principally of replacement of obsolescent vessels no longer of value to Brazil's sea defense. To this Hughes replied:

"The Department fully understands that it is unlikely that any new construction will be undertaken in the immediate future, but it desires to point out to Admiral Vogelgesang that the existence of such a program as the one proposed will make it necessary for Argentina and Chile to elaborate likewise their naval programs and thus there may be started a competition in naval construction.

"The Brazilian building program is spoken of as a program of defense. The department does not know by what power Brazil is threatened that she should need such a large defensive fleet. Of 6,000 tons for submarines, 5,000 are to be new and 1,000 eventual replacement; of 15,000 tons for destroyers, 10,000 are new construction and 5,000 replacement; 50,000 of the 60,000 tons for cruisers are new construction, and the Minas Geraes is to be replaced in 1929 and the Sao Paulo in 1930 by battleships each of 35,000 tons, or a total of 70,000 tons.

Recall Threatened

"As the Minas Geraes and the Sao Paulo and other units in the Brazilian navy are practically obsolete, it is true that Brazil is now in an inferior position compared with Argentina and Chile, but the new program instead of putting Brazil on a footing of equality with those countries will place her in a very superior position, which will necessitate new naval construction by them for the same reason which now moves Brazil to desire new construction; namely, the desire not to be left in a position of inferiority.

"Any such result as this would be most unfortunate and there would be brought about a condition of rivalry in armaments in this hemisphere which up to the present has happily not existed.

"The department's feeling about this matter is so strong that it would rather recall the naval mission than assume the responsibility for the naval program that the mission has proposed."

Line Urged Between Truth, Propaganda

Inter-American Parley Delegates Air Views On Varied Problems

The greatest contribution that American education can make to the preservation of peace and democracy and the betterment of Pan American relations, in the opinion of delegates to the Inter-American conference, is to draw the line between propaganda and truth.

Rev. Gannon

A Gallup-like poll yesterday disclosed unanimity of opinion that adults, as well as youth, need more education to enable them to see national and international issues clearly.

Dr. James T. Shotwell, Columbia University professor and associated with the Carnegie Endowment, said this country needs to learn at the outset that "the fund of United States ideals of liberty and democracy are not our exclusive possession or invention."

Dr. Shotwell

Instead, they come from wide experience and heritage, he added, and Latin American countries have deverse ways of expressing the same ideals.

One major aim of education, in the opinion of Prof. Donald Rowland, history teacher at the University of Southern California, should be to keep the public generally from jumping too quickly to conclusions.

Dr. Rowland

While explaining that educators don't like to use the term "propaganda," Prof. Rowland suggested that much that is given out as factual nowadays is a distortion of truth.

The Right Rev. Robert I. Gannon, S. J., president of Fordham University, was optimistic over the beginning of an interchange of ideas among the Americas.

"We have a great deal to gain from Latin America," he said, "and I am glad to see the people of the United States waking up."

The greatest contribution education can make to the preservation of democracy and betterment of Pan American relations, according to Dr. Stephen Duggan, director of the Institute of International Education, New York, is to do just what the Inter-American conference aims to.

Dr. Duggan

"Without question," he said, "the exchange of students and teachers is the most important single activity. But it should always be on fellowships, in case of students, as otherwise the visiting youths may never become acquainted with our culture."

and to forward the civilization which, in the high calling of education, all of us must seek to serve."

Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of State, at an earlier session laid stress on the importance of private initiative, rather than Government sponsorship, in the promotion of an interchange of American culture through an exchange of students on fellowships, and professors.

Despite the work of the Pan American Union and the State Department, he said, "the fact that between the United States and other American republics intellectual relationships have not been as close or as extensive as we might desire."

The hint for aid from business interests in the project came from several educators during the course of a full day of speeches and discussion, but was emphasized by Stephen Duggan, director of the Institute of International Education, New York.

A Way to Build Good Will

He suggested frankly that American business firms which have investments in Latin America should contribute to the promotion of cultural interchanges and thus build up good will.

State Department officials were pleased over the response of American educational institutions to the conference and pointed out that professors, many of them presidents of large colleges and universities, had come to Washington from all sections of the country at their own expense or that of their institution to attend the conference.

The delegates were told that many exchanges of professors and students among the United States and Latin-American countries already have been effected since the convention for the promotion of inter-American cultural relations was held in 1936 at Buenos Aires.

Twelve nations, including this country, have signed the convention which provides specifically for the exchange of one professor between each of the ratifying states. They are Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Nicauragua, Panama, Venezuela, and the United States.

Cultural Attaches Proposed

A proposal that diplomacy recognize the role of education in improving United States relations with Latin America by setting up a position of cultural and educational attache in every embassy and legation was made by Dr. William Mather Lewis, president of Lafayette College, Easton, Pa.

He said such a post should be at least equally important with that of naval or military attache.

George S. Messersmith, Assistant Secretary of State, who presided at the afternoon session, assured the delegates that the newly established division of cultural relations in the State Department was not set up to spread American propaganda among neighboring republics as were several notable governmental agencies in European countries.

The Rev. John F. O'Hara, president of Notre Dame University, suggested a practical problem of providing closer contacts with visiting Latin-American students. Because of closer parental supervision, he said, many of these youths are unaccustomed to the liberties that are traditional among American-bred college students.

During the morning session Dr. Herbert E. Bolton, head of the department of history, University of California, warned the educators against too much ego in the proposed cultural exchange with Latin America.

South American culture even precedes that of the United Statees, he said. A dozen colleges were established in Spanish and Portuguese-speaking countries of the New World before Harvard opened.

Latin Editors To Be Guests Of Press Club

Luncheon Today to Honor Men Who Won The Cabot Awards

Jose Santos Gollan, Sunday editor of La Prensa, of Buenos Aires, and Dr. Luis Miro Quesada, president of the directors of El Commercio, of Lima, will address a luncheon at the National Press Club at 1 p. m. today. Arthur Hachten, president of the club, also will speak.

Gollan and Dr. Quesada, who were recently awarded the Maria Moors Cabot prizes for journalism by Columbia University, will be received earlier by President Roosevelt and attend his press conference.

The South American journalists yesterday were guests of Dr. L. S. Rowe, director of the Pan American Union, at a luncheon there.

Both recipients of the Cabot prize, awarded for "achievement which advances public understanding and sympathy among peoples of any two countries in the Western Hemisphere" are prominent in the development of inter-American relations through the press.

Gollan has written many of La Prensa's editorials on relations of Argentina and the United States. Under Dr. Quesada's direction, El Commercio last May published its one-hundredth anniversary issue, said by Dr. Carl Ackerman, of the Columbia Journalism School, to be "one of the greatest achievements of the press of Latin America."

Six Persons Offer To Sell Their Eyes

New York, Nov. 9 (AP).—Five women and one man, in six different States, each are offering to sell an eye in order to keep a home together.

The six offers, each in a letter that sounds a little desperate, have reached the Associated Press New York office in the last three weeks.

The hope of selling an eye is based on the fact that a bit of the cornea, the clear window over the pupil, can be used in certain unusual cases to restore sight of the blind.

With their return tomorrow it was said negotiations would be started next week to settle their grievances, which are directed against the other major studios as well as Selznick.

Eyes of Flies Change Color Artificially

Laboratory Mistake Yields a Surprising Genetic Discovery

Palo Alto, Calif., Nov. 9 (AP).—A surprising discovery that bacteria can "artificially" manufacture hormones which change the color of a tiny insect's eyes was reported today by Dr. Edward L. Tatum, Stanford University geneticist.

The discovery may advance the scientific quest for some of the secrets of evolution. Geneticists all over the world have spent many years studying the vinegar fly, particularly its eye color, as a key to the mechanism of heredity.

This scientific find was due to a laboratory mistake. A culture which Dr. Tatum had been feeding vinegar fly larvae became contaminated with some unidentified germ. The larvae were from a strain of white-eyed flies, but when they grew up they had brown eyes.

Changes in eye color are nothing new to vinegar fly experimenters but it had been assumed the insect itself was the only organism capable of manufacturing the hormones which caused them.

The Stanford experiment was designed to test the effect of tryptophane on eye pigment development. Tryptophane is an amino acid, one of the twenty-odd complicated substances which go into protein, a basic compound in all living things.

Larvae fed on tryptophane, sugar and yeast produced white-eyed flies as expected. But the germ-contaminated portion of the food produce the change.

Dr. Tatum said it was evident that the change was due to the intake of a specific substance with hormonal activity which was produced by the unknown bacteria only in the presence of tryptophane.

Blast Wrecks Building in N. Y.

New York, Nov. 9 (U.P.).—An explosion in a business building in the East Side midtown district tonight shattered the front of the three-story brick structure and started a fire which sent smoke into two nearby hotels.

None was injured by the unexplained blast and the buildings where it occurred was empty at the time, according to police and flemen.

Nazis Extend Siegfried Line To North Sea

Constructed in Ten Weeks to Include Netherlands Frontier

Copyright by New York Times.

Berlin, Nov. 9.—Germany's western fortifications, it was revealed here today, have been extended to include her borders with Belgium and the Netherlands. Until the outbreak of the war the "West Wall" ran only from Switzerland to Belgium. Now, according to the Boersen Zeitung, it forms an unbroken chain of fortifications to the North Sea.

The extension of the Siegfried Line, according to this report, has been constructed in less than ten weeks and the armor is said to be stronger than that on the original line. The defences, it is claimed, extend in places to three miles deep and have been built with the most modern improvements gleaned from the most recent experience.

Construction of these new defences, it is claimed here, is evidence that "Germany's strategical intentions do not correspond with those contentions that Germany intends violating neutrality."

The army high command reported only slight activity in the last two days.

Enemy attacks in strength of approximately one to two companies southwest of Saarbruecken and Pirmasens were reported against German outposts on the Franco-German border on Tuesday and Wednesday. Both attacks were declared repulsed and a number of prisoners captured in counter attacks.

On Tuesday in addition five enemy planes were reported brought down and yesterday two additional ones, including one British plane.

Yesterday two French planes were shot down, it is claimed, as well as two enemy captive balloons, while one German plane was reported "missing."

Big Nazi Offensive Is Expected Daily

is that besides enlistment of many more reservists, all furloughs have now been stopped.

But while these preparations hitherto have produced merely vague apprehensions, these apprehensions now find almost open confirmation in official and other pronouncements.

Propaganda in Manhunt

There is, first, Hitler's own vitriolic attack against Britain, with the words: "We shall now talk to the English in the language which alone perhaps they still understand." And when the Germans talk about the English they mean the English and not the British, some of whom they still hope are counted among neutrals as perhaps their friends.

Secondly, there is a propagandistic touch given in the search for the assassins of Munich which is directed solely against the English with just a hint of a possible Jewish influence behind. Not only is it announced that clew in the search lead beyond the German borders, for which purpose a domestic award of 600,000 marks is increased by another 300,000 marks of foreign currency, but an attempt in Voelkischer Beobachter this morning to claim that "enemies of the state are still living on the territory of the greater German Reich" was quickly squelched.

Secret Service Blamed

The semi-official Deutscher Dienst, in words finding innumerable echoes in the press throughout the Reich, said:

"We Germans know that the instigators, moneymen, those who are capable of such base and abominable crime, are the same who always have worked with murder in politics, agents of the (British) secret service. Behind them stand the British war agitators."

And to bring the charge even nearer home, semiofficial and press pronouncements constantly dwell on Prime Minister Chamberlain's war speech of September 3 in which he says "I trust I may live to see the day when Hitlerism has been destroyed." But in German versions "Hitlerism" is now being replaced with Hitler personally or with "Der Feuhrer."

Pogrom Recalled

If all this is plain enough, it is made even plainer in press headlines and comments which, except for the world-wide scale of the new issue, recall the language used after the assassination of Ernst von Rath a year ago today which led to the final pogrom on the Jews. The Lokal Anzieger summarizes many similar comments when it writes:

"The assassinations in the Buergerbraeu cellar in Munich is an English general attack on the German people. Whoever attacks Adolf Hitler, especially when he employs assassination or the aid of common criminals, has opened up a bonfire of bombs and grenades on all Germans, on every man, every woman and every child.

"The attack has failed. Now we shall answer and answer with the hardness inherent in a people * * * who can convert their defense into unconditional victory."

Answer "Without Mercy"

According to the Boersen Zeitung this answer will be "without mercy" as a page-wide headline in the Deutscher Allgemeine says "the battle for victory is over England."

How independent military calculations are of the latest events however is indicated by the comment of the Frankfurter Zeitung on Hitler's speech, written before the assassination attempt became known:

"Whoever knows the history of this man (Hitler) and his movement knows that the word 'capitulation' is outside of his comprehension, but he also knows that Hitler will not surrender the law of action to the enemy, that he does not permit others to prescribe either the battleground or the weapon, but that he knows how to strike. National socialism did not seek the war, but now that it must fight it will fight with an impudence of which its opponents perhaps had no conception when they unleashed the war."

Question Unanswered

To clinch the matter, the semi-official Dienst Aus Deutschland writes:

"It is natural that under the impression of new events the Dutch and Belgian mediation offer no longer finds any noteworthy attention among the German public, especially since the speeches of Lord Halifax and Herr Hitler are already recorded as answers, irrespective of any formal diplomatic settlement of the matter. The German people believe in victory and will fight for it."

All this, however, still leaves the question unanswered as to where and how the blow will fall—whether it will be a costly frontal attack on the Western Front or an attack on the British empire's flank, say on Gibraltar, Mosul or India, favored in many German speculations, or whether, as the Lokal Anzeiger suggests, it will be a mighty air raid on England, especially its harbors, docks and armament industries.

Nazis Divided, Say French

By the Associated Press

Paris, Nov. 9.—French diplomatic circles today interpreted the attempt to assassinate Chancellor Hitler at Munich as indicating a split in the Nazi Party over Germany's alliance with Soviet Russia.

One opinion reflected in the French press was that anti-Soviet elements attempted to kill Der Fuehrer to gain control of the party.

Diplomatic sources said last night's blast might possibly push Hitler into a sudden move.

The newspaper L'Intransigeant said the incident showed that "the Gestapo (secret police), backbone of the regime, has either failed of its duty or itself participated in the plot."

No U. S. Congratulations

State Department offices closed last night with no message of congratulation having been sent to Fuehrer Hitler on his escape from the bomb attempt at Munich on Wednesday.

Secretary of State Hull said at his press conference yesterday that this Government was awaiting official diplomatic reports on the bombing before deciding whether to take action. Up to a late hour no such report had been received from the Berlin Embassy.

On May 12 of last year President Roosevelt sent a congratulatory message to President Vargas of Brazil, whose assassination had been attempted. The message said:

"Please accept my sincere congratulations upon your fortunate escape from the attempt made upon your life. I send you my most cordial greetings and the assurances of my high personal regard."

When Mr. Roosevelt was President-elect, it was recalled, an attack was made upon him while he was on a Florida visit, and Mayor Anton Cermak of Chicago, standing beside Mr. Roosevelt, was fatally wounded, a crime for which Giuseppe Zangara was later executed.

Messages of congratulation on his escape were received by the President-elect from heads of many governments, from late Pope Pius XI, President Zamora of Spain, President Justo of Argentina, the late King George IV of England, and others.

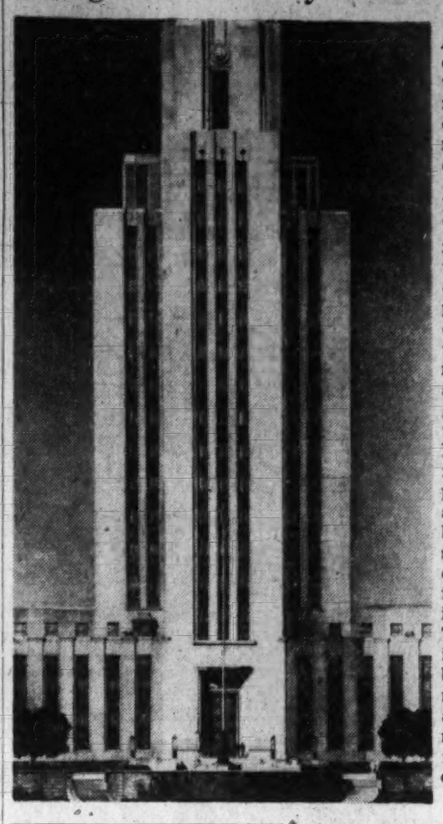
Design of New Navy Medical Center



Architect's conception of the tower of the main building of the new naval medical center under construction at Bethesda, Md. The Navy announced yesterday that the exterior will be precast concrete, similar to the concrete mixture known as exposed aggregate used in the naval model Basin at Carderock, Md. Small pieces of quartz and granite are brought to the surface of the concrete to give it a more pleasing appearance. The foundation is expected to be complete next week, approximately two months ahead of schedule

Navy Medical Center to Be Of Concrete

Tower of Building Redesigned Because Of Added Weight

The Navy announced yesterday that the exterior of its new medical center at Bethesda, Md., will be precast concrete instead of brick.

Similar material to that in the naval model basin at Carderock, Md., will be used, it was said. This is a concrete mixture known as exposed aggregate in which small pieces of quartz and granite are brought to the surface when cast to present a more pleasing appearance.

As a result of the change, increasing the weight, the tower of the main building was redesigned.

Work on the foundation is expected to be completed next week, approximately two months ahead of schedule. A contract for the steel work of the tower will be let this month and construction should start early in January. By February, it is expected that contracts for the superstructure of the main building and other buildings will be awarded.

Workmen have started clearing ground to erect a 6-foot fence around the reservation. It will be 2 miles in length and cost $26,000, officials said.

The center will replace the existing Naval Hospital at Twenty-third and E streets northwest, which is too small for the Navy's needs. It will include a medical school, dental school, research facilities and a hospital of 500 beds. Ground was broken for the $4,850,000 project last June.

An important feature of the hospital will be that the essential facilities of wards, operating rooms, X-ray laboratories, etc., will be larger than is required for a hospital of the size planned. This is to permit its capacity to be doubled in wartime by building additional space for beds.

Nazi Attacks Fail to Crack North Flank

Night Infantry Raids Are Turned Back With Counterfire

By the Associated Press

Paris, Nov. 9.—German attempts to pierce the extreme northern flank of the French defense near the Luxemburg border failed today under French counter-fire, advices from the front said.

A series of night infantry raids was turned back, military sources asserted, without yielding an inch of French territory between the Moselle and Saar Rivers.

Authorized commentators declared German activity was entirely local, although they said it indicated a renewal of offensive tactics, which so far have been defeated.

Military advices said the Germans struck four or five French advance posts simultaneously at nightfall last night.

Lighter attacks were described as aimed against a line in the low hills which parallel the frontier between Apach and Merzig.

Although the German attacks were heavier than for the last several days, the French said they still were in the preliminary stage.

The French were watching closely for a sign that Hitler might be contemplating co-ordinated attacks on the Western Front and against the Allies through the Netherlands and perhaps Belgium.

Deputy Seized as Conspirator

Paris, Nov. 9 (AP).—Deputy Jean Pierre Mourer, of Strasbourg, was arrested today on a charge of conspiracy against the state.

Nazi Intentions Keep France Guessing

By G. H. Archambault.

Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, No. 9.—On all sides tonight one hears such remarks as "very soon we will know the German intentions," or "we shall not have long to wait now." But the plain truth is that everybody is guessing.

Everything points to diplomatic pressure being applied to Holland and Belgium to induce them to modify their conception of neutrality and to make concessions akin to those obtained by the Soviet from the Baltic states. It is evident also that the concentration of the German armies along neutral frontiers is intended to support that pressure.

But it is equally evident that the Reich would be burning its boats if it invaded neutral territory. Consequently everything turns on this question: In view of the price, both moral and material, that would have to be paid, does the German leadership consider it has a reasonable hope of success?

There is talk of the Germans hastily building bridges across the lower Rhine—but at the points indicated there are virtually no roads to serve such bridges. Other rumors have it that the Germans are now massing cavalry near the Netherlands border and are bringing up many tank cars filled with gasoline. Two German planes are reported to have been engaged in mysterious skywriting over a Luxemburg city.

On the Rhine-Moselle front German activity has been twofold: Systematically testing the capacity for resistance of the French first lines, and reconnoitering from the air, not only of the Allied advanced zone and its immediate rear, but also the bases and lines of communication behind that area.

Bombers to Leave Today

Langley Field, Va., Nov. 9 (AP).—Seven giant four-motored B-17 bombers will take off at two-minute intervals from the Langley Field air base at 9 a. m. tomorrow on the first leg of their 6,062-mile flight to Rio de Janeiro, where they will represent the United States Air Corps at ceremonies Wednesday commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the Republic of Brazil.

Activities This Week in Capital Clubs

By Mary Harris

NEW PALL MALL STAR. Dancer Mavis Moore, who'll arrive in the Pall Mall Room next Monday, is said to be one of the most brilliant young dancers ever to appear in a Washington night club. With Emcee-dancer Bob Driscoll, who is also a highly finished dancer, she'll whirl in eye-filling Viennese waltzes and do a version of Ravel's "Bolero" that Bob promises us, will step up your pulse dangerously. Both Miss Moore and Driscoll (he's a pupil of Fokine) have a splendid background of ballet. This means that their dances will have that quality of finesse that marks the difference between dancers and "steppers."

P. S.—Miss Moore . . . the daughter of Carl Groat, notable Cincinnati editor, has no end of Capital social connections. Her Pall Mall debut will be a social event as well as an entertainment treat.

RIVIERA'S BIRTHDAY GIFT. The jolliest of birthday parties will be flung by the Lounge Riviera next Thursday, November 16, in celebration of its first anniversary . . . Riviera will give both itself and Washington a lovely birthday gift by presenting Singer Aedel Van, one of the sweetest (both in appearance and voice) singers our town has produced. Since her initial professional appearance this fall, Adele has gained tremendously in vocal technique and the art of "selling a song." But then she's been under the expert tutelage of Evalyn Tyner who, we trust, will ripple off some piano courses at Riviera's birthday party.

JAM! JAM! JAM! That's what Washington's new Society of Modern Music means. Members of local dance and theater orchestras have formed the new sassiety and chartered club rooms over Dick's Grill with the idea of having a spot to hold unlimited "jam sessions" when they're through work. Christening of the new S. M. M. will take place tomorrow eve, we hear. The "jam sessions" will be limited to members, generally, although there may be occasional guests. Marty Emerson, of the Capitol Theater and formerly of Bill Strickland's Lotus orchestra, is one of the leading spirits in the new venture, which merits applause and support of all admirers of modern swing.

PEACE, IT'S WONDERFUL! Armistice eve and Armistice night will be celebrated this evening and tomorrow in varying style all over town . . .

Jeff Ford's new Club Lafayette will be the scene of a really hoopte-doo Saturday party. All sorts of noisemakers, trick hats and souvenirs. Merriment comparing to the original armistice night. Paul Kain has made arrangements of all of the songs of World War I, including one "Broadway Rose" which he claims was a war song. Perhaps the vets may remember it . . .

The King's Jesters at Metronome have a bundle of new songs and skits that, as far as we can make out, deal more with football battles than the blessings of peace. They'll unfurl their party on Friday. The Neptune Room's Bert Granoff will deal out 1918 melodies by the dozen on Saturday and it's a safe plunge to bet a "zombie" cocktail that all hands will be singing along with Bert before the evening's over . . . Plenty of the doughboys of '18 will foregather in the Hi Hat and join in lustily with Jack Manning when he shouts, "How You Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm?" . . . And when Milton Davis starts to novachord "Madelon" with bugle effects, the Rainbow Room patrons won't know whether to march or foxtrot. Anchor Room's Matt Windsor will play any armistice night selection you can name from "Tipperary" to "F. D. R. Jones" now said to be the marching song of France's poilus.

KING COLE NEWS. Rena Cournyn, the black-eyed beautiful who sang for fun in the King Cole Room the other eve, may be singing there for dinero next week . . . It all depends upon whether K. C.'s Evelyn Knight, now under the weather, is able to return . . . Rena looks and sings so much like Helen Morgan that you'd vow she was a younger sister of that famed piano-percher. In fact, this column will wager a K. C. steak sandwich that she is a Morgan relative.

P. S. Important. It looks as though Evie Knight will be the star attraction at a Miami night spot this season. More on this later.

Bill McCune, whose music is proving a big hit in Carlton's Shar-Zad Room

Adele Van, lovely junior songstress, appears in the Lounge Riviera beginning on November 16

MARY, MARY, QUITE CAPRICIOUS! Cafe Caprice was the scene of a rousing reception to Washington's own Mary Martin last evening . . . Mary was in splendid voice, looked no end fetching in white decorated with brilliant Roman stripes that set off her brown eyes and dark curls . . . She sang "Comes Love," "Melancholy Baby" and dozens of others to a friendly and happy audience . . . Definitely an excellent addition to Caprice is sylphlike Mary.

ATTENTION, AL SIMMONDS! New York, spurred on by the example set by you and George, started a Brown Derby of its own last night. Honor guest at the opening was ex-Governor Al Smith. The Manhattan Brown Derby is on Fifty-second street. Next time you go to New York, you might drop in and give them some pointers on Derby running.

WHERE THEY ARE. Dale Sherman, Shar-Zad's prize warbler of last season, is now melodizing at the Hotel Emerson in Baltimore . . . The Dancing Hartmans, sensation of the Mayflower Lounge opening this fall, have just opened in the Empire Room of the Waldorf-Astoria in New York . . . Rosita Rios (Lounge Riviera last season) is being held over at Manhattan's Havana-Madrid . . . Woods and Bray, the Shoreham's favorite dancers, write to say that their current Boston spot is the Cocoanut Grove, ask you-all to stop in and have a spot of gossip with them if you go a-Bostoning.

"RED GEORGE," that red-eyed, snaggle-toothed, lop-eared sinner who bawls "Phantom Pirates" at the Pirates' Den, is none other than Capt. Don Dickerman in a make-up that he vows is as much trouble to put on as if he were playing the "Hunchback of Notre Dame." "But the way I sing, I've got to disguise myself," says Capt. Don. P. S.—The Pirates after retiring at 4 a. m., recently got up at 7 for the Early Birds' breakfast. They needed no costumes to look like pirates.

RAMBLING RUTHIE. That amusing clownette, Ruth de Quincey, who's dancing with Jimmy Givens at the Lotus, is a bona fide little trouper. She has often played the Earle Theater here and, with Jimmy, will soon go to Chicago's State Lake Theater. A year or so ago she was the dancing attraction of Isham Jones' orchestra at the Villa Venice in Chicago.

MAGICIAN'S PHILOSOPHL "The hand is quicker than the eye. That's why you see black eyes," says Magician Harris Schilling who's currently bewitching folks at Bamboo Gardens.

ROANOKE RHYTHM is the kind that Bill Mundy's orchestra deals out at the Fat Boy. Before coming to Washington, Bill led his 12-piece orchestra at Roanoke's Hotel Patrick Henry for two years, also did a lot of broadcasting.

SCHREINER MUSIC attracts jitter-bugs by the hundred to "Chuck" Snyder's Knotty Pine Tavern out on the Defense Highway near Lanham, Md. Jay Schreiner's orchestra is a standout in swing rhythm, has just what it takes to start the rug-cutters in high.

Enjoy the SCOTCH WITH A STORY

Capt. Harold A. White, explorer and world traveler, relates his fascinating experiences in this White Horse series. Follow it week by week.

A courier bows before the Maharajah of Nepal. Reverently he unveils the world's most precious collection of gems; clusters of blood-red rubies, diamonds of dazzling brilliance, pearls and dark green emeralds. He speaks: "Accept these, Your Majesty, in the name of Nana Sahib, who asks nothing in exchange but his life." The Maharajah nods. Thus, one of the largest ransoms in the world was paid with gems amassed by murder and theft, through the centuries, from every part of Asia. Captain White has seen the jewels of Nana Sahib, who lead the bloodiest mutiny in India. They now adorn the Maharajah's crown! If you were richer than the King of Nepal, you could enjoy no more luxurious Scotch than White Horse. For in each glass of this matchless Scotch there's a treasure of enjoyment. Though its quality is rare, White Horse is always close at hand. Stop at the nearest sign of the White Horse and taste the Scotch that was made for kings but is yours for the asking. Match it if you can!

British Parallel Bombing to Reichstag Fire

Attack on Hitler Believed Attempt To Unify Germany

By Robert P. Post.
Copyright by New York Times.

London, Nov. 9.—The British reaction to the Munich beer cellar bomb is one of extreme skepticism. There was no formal statement on the matter, the general attitude of Whitehall and the press being that the German charge that the bomb was exploded by the British Secret Service was not worth discussing. As one official observer said today, "the British Secret Service is occasionally stupid, but it has never been that stupid."

It is suggested that it might have been the action of the Nazis themselves. "The people who set the Reichstag fire and so came into power would know how to do the same thing over again," was one comment.

This is the line of thought, which the Times of London will take in an editorial tomorrow. It is suggested here the bomb was deliberately planted either to draw the German people closer to Hitler or else in an effort to get rid of some Nazi leaders who are opposed to the new pro-Russian policy.

It is also suggested that the explosion might have been engineered by dissident Nazis, or Germans who want to get rid of the present German ruler and end the war.

The British are waiting for the Nazis to blame the explosion on Winston Churchill.

The laughter with which the British met the German accusations became louder after a German broadcast cited the Archbishop of Canterbury's speeches on a Christian's duty in wartime as proving where the moral instigation of the crime lay.

But there were not lacking people who saw the outrage, whether they believed it was planned or not, as the first step in renewed German activity.

Hungarians Sympathize

Budapest, Hungary, Nov. 9.—Immediately upon receipt of the bombing news, Foreign Minister Csaky went to see the German Minister to express the consternation of the government and people for the attempt, as well as the joy felt at learning of Fuehrer Hitler's escape. The House of Deputies decided to send a telegram of sympathy to the Reichstag.

The semiofficial evening paper, Esti Ujsag, deplores that an attempt has been made on the life of a statesman "to whom Hungary owes so much." The National Socialist evening paper, Pesti Ujsag, points out that providence has saved Hitler. "Hitler lives and with him lives national socialism. Hitler will show now his real strength," it says.

More Bombs to Follow

London, Nov. 9 (INS).—The illegal German Freedom Station, believed to be a transportable broadcasting set, today declared there will be further attempts upon the lives of Chancellor Hitler and his Nazi hierachy. The station broadcast:

"The first bomb against German dictatorship exploded in Munich.

Sign of Division Seen

Begrade, Yugoslavia, Nov. 9.—News of the Munich attempt dominates the press. The public, with bitter memories of the assassination of its own leaders through international disaffection, regards the attempt on Hitler's life as a sign of division in Germany.

Gibson Blames Dissension

Philadelphia, Nov. 9 (U.P.).—Hugh Gibson, former United States Ambassador to Belgium, said today he believed "somebody local" and foreign agents attempting to agitate an anti-Nazi uprising were responsible for the Buergerbrau Hall explosion.

Gibson said he felt the incident showed evidence of widespread Nazi dissension.

At the same time, the former envoy, who retired last year after 30 years of diplomatic service, said he believed that the Dutch-Belgian mediation offer probably was the result of a threat from Germany.

"Hitler has been very anxious to have someone open the way or help with his peace offensive," Gibson said. "Italy didn't come through. Neither did Russia, and we, the United States, were not in the market."

Reich Exports Far Below Expectation; Belgrade Withholds Deliveries; Messerschmidt Planes Eyed Warily

Copyright by New York Times.

Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Nov. 9.—German-Yugoslav trade relations are under severe stress because German exports, regulated by last month's agreement, are far below expectation, it was learned today. Consequently, Yugoslavia has been withholding delivery of goods promised in compensation.

Bad feeling has been caused in commercial circles here by an attempt of the Germans to raise prices, including those of goods already delivered. Germany is reported to be falling behind not only on commercial products but also on armaments, the supplying of which was the dominant feature of the agreement. As armaments were bartered principally against minerals, including copper from the French-owned Bor mines, Germany now is receiving less of Yugoslavia's minerals than she expected.

It is learned from high economic authorities that the German mission which arrived unexpectedly last week, left Belgrade today without shaking Yugoslavia's determination to deliver only against goods received.

Skeptical of Planes

The report that French aviators brought down nine Messerschmidt planes without loss has an indirect bearing on trade negotiations with Germany. Germany is understood to have contracted to supply 100 of these machines to Yugoslavia, and two dozen already have arrived. The general staff is understood now to be adopting a more critical attitude to the quality of this type of plane, and to be pressing Britain, France and America for airplanes.

News that Yugoslavia's minister to Bucharest was present at a diplomatic function at the Soviet Legation day before yesterday created great interest here, as this is the first time that diplomatic relations have been established in any form with Soviet Russia by Yugoslavia.

Envoys Meet in Sofia

Sofia, Nov. 9.—The prime minister today received the Yugoslav minister returning from Belgrade and the Belgian, Italian, British and Turkish ministers and the Polish charge d'affaires. There is no comment in today's press on the attempt to assassinate Hitler.

Budapest, Nov. 9 (AP).—War Minister Charles Bartha told the Chamber of Deputies today that Hungary had started construction of fortifications along her new frontier with Russia.

Bartha's announcement coincided with the arrival of Italian Gen. Enrico Ricardi in Budapest. Italy has shown a strong friendliness toward the Hungarian government.

Flint Unloading; Skipper Praises Nazi Prize Crew

Copyright by New York Times.

Bergen, Norway, Nov. 9.—Capt. Joseph A. Gainard said today that the City of Flint was being unloaded and that she would carry only ballast on her return trip to the United States. The cargo will be either stored here or sold.

Capt. Gainard said he would sail for the United States as soon as the unloading had been completed.

He expressed his admiration for the way in which the German prize crew, which took over the ship when it was stopped at sea by the Deutschland October 9, had performed its duty. He said that the Germans were strict but showed great consideration for the American crew.

He said that the Germans had even refused to take food from the Americans until they were sure that there were ample supplies for the return journey to an American port.

France Seeks 'Total Peace,' Says Reynaud

Finance Minister Speaks at American Luncheon in Paris

By P. J. Philip.
Copyright by New York Times.

Paris, Nov. 9.—Speaking at a weekly luncheon of the American Club in Paris today, Finance Minister Paul Reynaud defined France's war aims in these words: "We seek no material profit from this war. But the ideal for which we are fighting—your ideal as well as ours—will be defended to the end. We went into this war against our will but we will not fight it half-heartedly Our enemies wanted a total war. What we want and are determined to get is total peace."

Reynaud reviewed events of the past few years and especially of the past year since French workers rejected a general strike summons and accepted longer hours and harder work.

For a long time, Reynaud said, Europe has not been really at peace. There had been going on almost a bloodless war which sought to impose on Europe the law of the jungle which is a denial of all Christian doctrines and principles. In that war, he said, acts of barbarity had been committed by those who were pretending to offer peace. There was the assassination of Engelbert Dollfuss in Austria.

There was the slow martyrdom of Kurt Schuschnigg, guilty of wishing to organize a free plebiscite. There was the persecution of the people of Prague, guilty of having put on their holiday clothes in order to prove they were the masters of their souls. There was Poland. In eighteen months Europe had seen three independent nations laid in the tomb.

"And then," Reynaud continued, "Nazi Germany came to us with offers of peace which really meant 'give me a breathing spell and let me digest the substance of my first victims, and thus get strength to go on.' Who can doubt that she would go on?"

Referring to American neutrality, he said: "All of you in this room at least know that if American neutrality should ever be compromised it will not be by any act of France or her allies. For you know that what we need is not men, but arms and raw materials and machines."

New Plane Device Cuts Ignition in Crashes

Britain has developed a new safety device which automatically cuts off ignition and lighting circuits when a plane crashes or overturns.

A report from the American commercial attache at London revealed the device is based on pendulum action working on gravity in the case of impact, and works immediately to cut off electric and engine exhaust. The device, the report stated, is not affected by the plane's gyrations.

Md. U. Bronze Terrapin Gets Blue—Georgetowns' Color

Kelso Shipe and Jean Cissel say they know that the school's bronze terrapin, peering from beneath a coat of light blue paint, has been the victim of Georgetown students. They vow they'l get revenge on the football field as the two schools meet tomorrow

Peering from beneath a coat of light blue paint, Maryland University's giant bronze terrapin, yesterday presented a picture of abject humility.

"That Georgetown gang has been out here again," they said. "That's their school color."

Immediately student leaders prepared to guard against further indignities to "Terpdom's shrine." A cordon of students will be thrown around the terrapin tonight. They will take turns beating a bass drum in slow cadence, continuing until the opening of the annual football clash between the two schools tomorrow afternoon at Griffith Stadium.

Despite precautions of Maryland students, the 600-pound diamondback terrapin, imbedded in a concrete base, has fallen prey to numerous bands of marauding rival college students since it was presented to the university in 1933 by the Student Government Association and the senior class.

Georgetown University students have smeared it with blue paint on three occasions. But the terrapin's most harrowing experience was in 1933 when it was only a yearling.

'Final' Demands Given Finns at Moscow Parley

Delegates Cable Terms to Helsiniki After Kremlin Talks

By the United Press

Helsinki, Finland, Nov. 9.—Russia tonight sent Finland what are regarded as the "final" Russian military and territorial demands after a 75-minute conference in Moscow between Finnish and Russian negotiators, including Josef Stalin.

The demands were dispatched to Helsinki in coded cable form by the Finnish mission headed by Juhu K. Paasikivi.

At midnight Foreign Minister Eljas Erkko still was studying the message from Moscow and no announcement was forthcoming, except for confirmation that the negotiations had been resumed in the Russian capital and that a message had been received.

It was believed that the Soviet message concerned Russia's demands for an ice-free port at Petsamo on the Arctic and a naval base at Hangoe, dominating the north side of the entrance to the Gulf of Finland.

[There was a growing inclination, the New York Times reported, to accept the stories emanating from diplomatic sources that the negotiations will not take a long time now, as previously was expected.

[The nature of Dr. Paasikivi's instructions was kept secret, but it was surmised that they suggest a solution to the impasse reached over the Soviet proposal to lease a naval base at Hangoe on the Finnish mainland, which was met with a firm refusal.

[They may also refer to Russian claims to a zone along the frontier on the Karelian Isthmus or the cession of territory in the western part of Fisherman's Peninsula, flanking the eastern outlet of Finland's only Arctic port, Petsamo.—Editor's note.]

CHAMPAGNE

Fine champagne is famously the most appropriate of all wines for festive occasions, great or simple. It is equally suitable for casual use; a glass provides a pleasant interlude during a warm day, it is refreshing after exercise and splendid with either luncheon or dinner.

Champagne Perrier Jouet
English Cuvée

This great champagne is an accepted leader in the exacting London market and is held in similar esteem by most American wine lovers. Dry without being thin, flavory but not heavy, it is, we think, just about the perfection of fine champagne.

For more modest purses or extensive entertaining we offer, with full confidence, ACKERMAN-LAURANCE, DRY-ROYAL, a charming sparkling Saumur which we feel is the peer of all but the very great champagnes. Lacking the acidity found in most secondary champagnes, this fine Loire wine is made in the traditional champagne manner and is entirely appropriate for any occasion where champagne is desired.

SECOND DIVER: "Million-dollar manner's right. Notice that rye tonight in the glasses we're painted on? Million-dollar liquor, lad."

FIRST DIVER: "Sure!... Signet. You should have heard the man who was using my glass. 'Lightest bonded rye I ever tasted,' he kept saying. The boss chuckles and says..."

"Everyone raves about Signet—and no wonder! As I get it, the Hiram Walker people start right off by distilling Signet so that it's especially light and smooth. Then they age it in casks that have gotten good and mellow aging other fine whiskies from their own distillery.

It's Aged in Aged Wood

"Seems that's the way Scotch and Canadian whiskies and French brandies have always been aged. But nobody ever did that in America before! That's why Signet's the first bonded whiskey of its kind. And you'll agree with me that a smooth-flavored, light-bodied bonded rye like Signet is custom-made for this enlightened age. And so's the price!"

SECOND DIVER: "Distilled for lightness, then aged in aged wood—so that's how they make Signet so light and smooth! Makes me wish I had a leak in my helmet, so I could get a sip!"

Eleven Minutes Make a Picture

ADOLF HITLER (at right) walks from Anhalter Station, Berlin, flanked by Field Marshal Hermann Goering (right) and another colleague high in the Nazi regime. Der Fuehrer escaped the blast which shattered the Buergerbrau Beer House in Munich by just 11 minutes. Either there was a miscalculation in timing or Hitler's decision to leave the celebration of the "Beer hall putsch" ahead of schedule caught the plotters unaware. The explosion occurred at 9:21 p. m. behind the rostrum where Der Fuehrer was speaking. He had finished his war talk to veteran Nazi followers at 9:05 p. m. and left the hall at 9:10 p. m.

Business Loan Limit Urged By Morgenthau

$25,000 in Capital Credit Is Enough, Says Secretary

Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau said yesterday that, if Government facilities are to be set up to make it easier for small businessmen to get long-term credit for capital purposes, a $25,000 limit should be placed on individual credit advances.

As to whether adequate long-term credit facilities now exist for small businessmen, Morgenthau said he was "from Missouri."

He discussed the problem Wednesday, he said, with three bankers, one from St. Louis, one from Boston and one from Atlanta.

"They told me," he said, "that their banks have had a tremendous increase in requests for loans in amounts of one, two, three and five thousand dollar. They are taking care of these requests, wherever possible.

"The fellow who has an order and wants a loan to expand his plant which he will repay in from five to ten years, is not cared for. He cannot repay a loan in five years unless he makes exorbitant profits, and therefore must have longer-term credit."

Morgenthau felt that a $1,000,000 maximum for small business loans, as provided for in the Meade bill, was entirely too high.

U. S. Inventor Of Cyclotron Wins Nobel Physics Prize

Stockholm, Nov. 9 (AP).—The 1939 Nobel prize for physics was awarded tonight by the Royal Academy of Sciences to Prof. Ernest Orlando Lawrence, of Berkeley, Calif., and the 1939 prize for chemistry went to Prof. Leopold Ruzicka, of Zurich, and Adolph Butenandt, Berlin scientist.

Prof. Lawrence was given the prize for invention and development of the cyclotron and results obtained with it, especially in artifically radioactive elements. He is on the faculty of the University of California.

Prof. Ruzicka announced in 1934 the first artificial production of the male sex hormone.

Dr. Butenandt is known for his biochemical studies of the hormone.

Hitler Must Move

By Barnet Nover

Holland Prepares For The Worst

ON REPEATED occasions since Hitler's Reichstag speech of October 6, Nazi spokesmen have warned the Allies that rejection of the Fuehrer's peace bid would compel the Third Reich to wage "war in earnest."

This diplomatic offensive fell flat from the very outset. But so far must ask more for our products."

Just before he stepped off the witness stand, Grace declared that "I don't like to build battleships."

"I wish this country never had to build another gun—I don't like that kind of business," he said with emphasis. "Let's put that money in construction."

Earlier in the day, he testified that Bethlehem, as well as the other steel corporations, adhered to the published price of steel on Government contracts, although they often undercut that price on private contracts.

Tried for Base Price

The actual market price of steel during 1937 and 1938 was below the official ("base..) price, but, Grace said, "it was our policy always to try to obtain the base price."

Grace's discussion of the stabilization problem in the steel industry economic primacy in all of central and southeastern Europe.

But Hitler could not wait for the fruit to ripen and fall painlessly into his lap. In March, German troops marched into Prague. In September, despite stern British and French warning, the attack on Poland began.

[illegible] policy of [illegible] livery at current prices, "you would have to adopt an almost independent pricing policy."

"Or be permitted to develop a price policy for the industry," Grace added.

Grace said "it certainly would be useful" to know what the demand for steel products would be, so that he could gauge steel output. "I don't know if the auto industry is going to build 2,000,000 or 4,000,000 cars next year," he pointed out.

Grace admitted that Carnegie-Illinois, a U. S. Steel subsidiary, "sets the competitive price for tin plate—when Carnegie-Illinois announces the official price for tin plate, we immediately adopt that price." The witness declared that "that's a competitive situation we must accept to get the business."

He added that he would feel perfectly free to urge tin plate manufactures to raise the tin plate price.

Excess Reserves Drop $30,000,000 in Week

The Federal Reserve Board said last night that lendable excess reserves of banks decreased $30,000,000 to $5,350,000,000 in the week ended November 8. The decrease was ascribed to an increase of money in circulation and an increase in Treasury cash.

The board also said that the 12 Federal Reserve banks bought $2,000,000 of Treasury notes, but sold a similar amount of Treasury bonds during the week, and also failed to replace $34,000,000 worth of investments in Treasury bills which came due and were paid off during the week.

Sugar Imports Dip Under Last Year

The Agriculture Department reported yesterday that American sugar imports amounted to 4,264,798 short tons, raw value, during the first 10 months of this year, compared with 4,405,709 short tons during the corresponding period last year. Although the imports were somewhat smaller this year, they were more than offset, officials said, by increased marketings by domestic sugar producers.

The imports were from the following sources: Cuba, 1,544,144 short tons; the Philippines, 924,348; Puerto Rico, 951,434; Hawaii, 794,896; the Virgin Islands, 5,602.

Neutrality 'Evasion'

By Ernest K. Lindley

The Ship Transfer

THE UNITED STATES LINE'S plan to keep 9 of its 11 transatlantic vessels in that service by transferring their registry to Panama is so slick that it is bound to invoke the charge that it is an evasion of the plain intent of the neutrality act.

Until Secretary Hull, on second thought, drew back, it had the nod of approval from all parties concerned in the Administration, from the President down. There is ground for thinking that even if persons high in the Administration were not co-authors of this scheme, they knew about it before Congress had finished its debate on the neutrality bill.

The outcry is not confined to those who opposed the Administration on the arms embargo question. Senator Schwellenbach, of Washington, calls this plan an "outrageous" evasion, and Senator Pepper, of Florida, described it as "improper." They are two of the President's most loyal supporters on domestic issues and foreign policy alike. Why Secretary Hull changed his mind is, therefore, easy to understand. The difficulty is in understanding why he made no objection in the first instance or why any responsible official thought that the transfer of registry could have been proposed—at least so soon after passage of the neutrality act—without eliciting charges of bad faith.

GOOD FAITH is at the heart of this controversy. The Administration obtained the repeal of the arms embargo only by its concessions to those who insisted that effective measures be taken to prevent the recurrence of the incidents which were the occasion, if not the underlying cause, for our entry into the World War in 1917. From the insistence of the so-called "isolationists" sprang the prohibition against travel on belligerent ships by American citizens and the cash-and-carry provisions.

Jurors Are Selected in Kuhn Case With Caution by Both Sides

Defense Calls Fair Trial in New York An Impossibility; Six Talesmen Are Challenged, Four of Them Peremptorily

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 9.—Armed dense reminders that race and political ideology were not at issue, ounsel set out with extraordinary aution today to pick a jury to try ritz Kuhn for the theft of $5,641 German-American Bund money.

The examination of veniremen as so meticulous and exhaustive hat late in the day only six jurors ad been accepted. Six talesmen ad been examined and challenged—our peremptorily—before the first uror, Morris C. Bullock, a trust ompany clerk, was allowed to take is seat in the box.

Not until this evening was the ury completed. These are its members: Bullock, foreman; Philip Shepey, sales engineer; Ernest Allen, ank official; Riley N. Stone, hotel anager; Charles H. Randall, superintendent of a steamship company; obert Jordan, business executive; ichard A. McDonald, officer of a otors corporation; James Subal cAllister, jr., banker; Addison B. ingham, trust company official; ernard L. Appleford, insurance an; Charles Reinold Noyes, retired conomist; C. Henry Mellon, jr., rust company official.

Huhn, a corpulent former German machine-gunner, looked on almly as his counsel, Peter L. F. abbatino, put to veniremen a series of question which suggested he line the defense may take.

"If it becomes necessary," Sabatino asked, "for the defense to rove that Mr. Kuhn was the head f an organization, and that the iembers believed that the head is he boss of everything, would that rejudice you?

"If part of the defense is that the efendant, as head of an organization, had certain unlimited powers, would that prejudice you?

"If it developed during the trial that the defendant was called leader of the bund or 'Bundesfuehrer,' would that prejudice you?

"Would the use of German names similar to Germans now in power in Germany prejudice you?

"Would any of the recent events in Germany since Hitler came to power influence you?"

He May Not Testify

Other defense questions indicated that Kuhn would not testify.

In a series of motions which were denied, Sabbatino had sought postponement and a change of venue, contending that a fair trial in New York was impossible. In addition, the defense had submitted an affidavit accusing President Roosevelt of having "shown hostility toward Germany in the present European conflict," and alleging "it is common knowledge that the present sympathies in this country preponderate in favor of the so-called Allies and against Germany."

Kuhn is on trial on 10 counts of a 12-count indictment, charged specifically with grand larceny, second-degree grand larceny and third-degree forgery. The additional counts—accusing him of the theft of $8,907 in bund funds—were severed for possible later trial. Thus he is accused with having stolen an aggregate of more than $14,000.

Better Understanding

For a long time, Pan Americanism was little more than a banquet phrase. The need for closer relations, for better understanding, among the 21 republics of this hemisphere had lip-service recognition both in this country and in the nations to the south of us. But, except for sporadic efforts, little was done to achieve these high aims.

Times have changed. Chronic disturbances across the seas, leading to a war the ultimate dimensions and consequences of which no man can foresee, have tended to draw the nations of the New World closer together. There is everywhere a greater recognition of their common aims and aspirations. There is also a much more positive desire not only to improve political and economic relations but also to foster cultural interchange among the American republics.

Proof of this development is to be found in the Conference on Inter-American Relations in the Field of Education now meeting here under the auspices of the Department of State and its Division of Cultural Relations. The conference has attracted educators from no fewer than 46 of the 48 States and is being attended by at least two-score college presidents.

Busy men, these educators have felt it worth while in the midst of a university term to come to Washington to discuss ways and means of improving cultural contacts between this Nation and its Latin-American neighbors. Such a meeting of minds can be productive of nothing but good.

Governments can do much to foster friendly relations between peoples. But, as Undersecretary of State Welles pointed out yesterday, the most truly constructive endeavors are those which result from a broadened base of understanding. To establish this firm basis for Pan-American cooperation is a challenging responsibility for the educators of this country. By its acceptance of the challenge the current conference may well prove a landmark in American education.

Sap Or Sapiens?

Dr. Will Durant, speaking the other evening to the Washington Hebrew Congregation, reaffirmed his belief in the inevitability of human progress, a doctrine that to many in these times seems less and less tenable. And even Dr. Durant was at some pains to point out that a great deal of philosophic authority can be marshaled against it.

Yet, not very long ago, the notion of progress was accepted as almost axiomatic. Throughout the 100 years between the end of the Napoleonic empire and the beginning of the first World War, the thought of the western world remained dominated by the concepts of the eighteenth century philosophies.

That was a period of unparalleled tranquillity and materiai prosperity. Invention, following in the path of natural science, had opened undreamed-of avenues of human activity; had brought undreamed-of comforts into human life. Distance was conquered, life was lengthened, literacy like suffrage was becoming universal. Yet all these blessings, wonderful as they seemed, were only an earnest of the wonderful state to which man might one day attain. For man was still the measure of the universe.

Religious conceptions, of course, had been severely shaken by scientific revelations, especially by Darwinism. But waning faith in Deity seemed only to strengthen faith in humanity. The long-triumphant ascent of man—by the bootstraps, as it were—from his protoplasmic origins seemed to endow him with an even vaster dignity than the special creation recorded in Genesis. Homo sapiens, as greatest of the vertebrates, lord of the primates, seemed somehow grander and nobler than in his former estate of a being "little lower than the angels"—especially in minds that could no longer believe in angels.

But that roseate picture has vanished. Man, who made Nature herself his handmaiden, has failed to achieve any mastery of himself. That perfection toward which he was assumed to be evolving seems now illusory. Where once it was said that man is distinguished from the rest of creation by his power of thought and of articulate speech, it is now said that he is distinguished from them principally by the multiplicity of his fears and by his peculiar capacities for cruelty, waste and self-destruction. If he is no longer a slave to Nature, he is nevertheless a slave to his own politics, his own economics and all the other strange inventions he has sought out.

And the more he uncovers the deep secrets of nature the less he appears to know of the secret of himself. He searches in vain in his vast tombs of psychology, biology and anthropology for an answer to the question, "What is man?" But perhaps he may yet discover it where Dr. Durant has evidently discovered his reasons for continuing to believe in progress—in faith, "the evidence of the things that appear not."

A Sweeping Verdict

By a unanimous verdict the Third Circuit Court of Appeals has upheld an NLRB order directing the Republic Steel Co. to disestablish company unions in five Ohio plants, to desist from attempts to wreck the independent union affiliated with the C. I. O., and to reinstate with back pay 5,000 employes dismissed at the time of the "little steel" strike of 1937.

The Court concluded that the evidence supported the Labor Board's opinion that the strikes at company plants were precipitated by the Republic's campaign to crush the Steel Workers Organizing Committee (a C. I. O. affiliate). Although the strike was an outgrowth of the company's refusal to sign a union contract, the Court held that the contract was sought by the union "solely to put an end to the warfare between the union and the Republic which had resulted from the latter's unfair labor practices."

This decision is rightly held to be a vindication of the C. I. O. group, as well as a major legal triumph for the NLRB. But the most significant aspect of the decision is the fact that it has teeth, and very sharp ones. For the Republic Steel is ordered to reinstate employes who lost their jobs in course of the struggle to establish representative collective bargaining, and to compensate them for wages which they would normally have earned.

The order is not as drastic as appears on the surface, because many of the workers concerned have already been put back on the pay rolls, while those for whom there are no places available remain on a preferential waiting list. Sums earned during the period of the layoff are also deductible from the amounts to be paid. Nevertheless, the payments are expected to be very heavy, having been estimated by lawyers for the company at $7,500,000.

The national labor relations act specifically authorizes the NLRB to give effect to its policies by ordering reinstatement of employes "with or without back pay," if they have been victims of unfair labor practices. The board has accordingly, on previous occasions, issued orders to make back payments. But heretofore the amounts involved have been comparatively small, and have not, therefore, attracted as much attention as the ruling in case of Republic Steel.

The Circuit Court decision, upholding an order that may necessitate payment of several millions of dollars in back wages, emphasizes the tremendous punitive power which is lodged in the NLRB to insure conformity with the terms of the Wagner act. If the Republic Steel has to make restitution to the extent foreshadowed, employers hereafter will doubtless be extremely careful not to infringe upon employe rights that might subject them to similar penalties. And workers, assured of compensation in case of dismissal for legitimate union activities, may become bolder joiners.

If one were certain that the NLRB could always be relied upon to deal out even-handed justice, the exercise of the authority to order reemployment of workers with back pay would arouse no misgivings. In view, however, of the chances for miscarriages of justice in a field where passion often distorts and obscures facts, the sweeping nature of the order applied to the Republic Steel Co. may well temper elation on the part of those who sympathize fully with the purposes of the Wagner act.

Intelligent Reporting

The Commercial and Financial Chronicle has issued a special number of its weekly review to mark the completion of a century of uninterrupted reporting of business and financial events. This service was inaugurated with the appearance of Hunt's Merchants' Magazine, merged in 1870 with the Chronicle which had been founded a few years earlier by Freeman Hunt.

In addition to its longevity, the Chronicle is remarkable for the continuity of its editorial policy. Very few changes in editorial management have occurred during the century of its existence. The infrequency of such changes and the close contacts existing between retiring editors and their successors undoubtedly help to explain the value of the services rendered by this unique publication.

The innovations, the bewildering changes of policy that have left many periodicals with nothing but a name to link them to their pasts, are not found in the Chronicle. A large part of its usefulness lies in the fact that the same discrimination which governed the selection and presentation of news events in former years is in evidence today.

While the Chronicle also has a reputation for fearless, though sometimes intolerant, editorial expression, its major value lies in the high quality of its reportorial work. It is, indeed, as a newspaper, rather than as an organ of business opinion, that the publication has achieved its present high standing.

Those many faithful readers to whom the Chronicle has always been a sure help in time of need will no doubt echo the hope that the second century of its existence will witness no changes calculated to destroy the continuity or the selective quality of its reporting.

"Directing The Masses"

Various emotions were aroused throughout the world by the attempt on Hitler's life. But one, which would be expected in the case of a ruler as popular as the Fuehrer is said to be, was noticeably lacking. Not even in Germany, it seems, was any surprise occasioned by the incident.

In part this is explicable because we live in a world where the element of surprise has been pared away by the sensational character of events. Clearly, however, this is not the whole explanation. The very character of the Nazi regime and the methods it continually employs make attempts to assassinate its leader all too probable. Hitler himself envisaged this when, in his speech to the Reichstag on September 1, he decreed Goering as his successor "should something happen to me."

Assassination, however, is not natural to the German temperament. And because German history prior to 1919 was on the whole very free from crimes of this character, superficial substantiation is given to the official assertion that "the plot originated abroad." Certainly the nature and setting of the explosion show that it could not have been the work of any single fanatic. The Nazi secret police are justified in their assumption that the ramifications of the outrage run far and deep.

But the fact that the incident itself was not surprising does not conceal certain surprising features of the incident. It is curious, for instance, that a plot which was so nearly successful was not wholly so. It is curious that an explosion so effective in destruction was timed so poorly that the intended victim and all his entourage were able to get away.

It is also curious that the German ministry of propaganda, at a moment when rejoicing over the Fuehrer's narrow escape would seem most in order, is drawing the moral that the attack on Hitler renders imperative something more than "half measures" in German military strategy. Why there should be a direct connection between the Munich bomb explosion and a smashing German offensive is not obvious. What is obvious is that this connection is being established by the German press.

In his fascinating chapter on "Propaganda," in "Mein Kampf," Hitler emphasized the importance of deceiving the people in behalf of a plan decided upon by those competent to lead. During war in particular, he wrote, "reflections concerning humanity" are to be wholly disregarded. "The task of propaganda," he concluded, "lies . . . in directing the masses toward certain facts, events, necessities, etc., the purpose being to move their importance into the masses' field of vision."

In February, 1933, the Reichstag building in Berlin was set on fire and the Communists blamed for it in order to demonstrate the "necessity" of an outright Nazi dictatorship. On the heels of the abortive bomb explosion at Munich the Nazi press is concentrating on "directing the masses" to the "necessity" of striking at England with every possible weapon.

The similarity of pattern is obvious. It wholly justifies the decision of the Department of State to get more definite information before congratulating Hitler on his miraculous escape.

Dr. Livingston Farrand, for 16 years president of Cornell, was a man who combined two great careers into one harmonious whole. A worker of outstanding distinction in the vital field of public health, he made an equally notable contribution to his times as university teacher and administrator.

Dr. Farrand's two careers met at many points. It was while a professor of anthropology at Columbia that he became secretary of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis and thus played a prominent role in the strikingly successful effort to reduce the ravages of the white plague. Nor did his interest in public health problems flag when, in 1914, at the University of Colorado, he first assumed the onerous duties of college president.

It was, indeed, during that period in his life that he won international recognition for his work with the Red Cross in France. Later, at Cornell, he helped build up that university's great medical school and also rendered real service as head of the State health commission.

The question has long been debated in educational circles whether a scholar-specialist or one particularly trained in administration is best fitted to head a great university. So far as Dr. Farrand was concerned, that question was pointless. His life was proof that a man of science can also be a great administrator, that faithful attention to academic duties need not preclude a man from active participation in public affairs.

If American inventors are so ingenious, why don't they get up a foolproof can-opener?

Europe's Quarrels

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Permit me to state a few facts regarding the article "Caribbean Danger" by Livingston Hartley, published in your issue of November 5.

Of all the empty, meaningless statements I have ever heard in my life, this propaganda, that Germany will eventually attack the United States, is the worst. Germany neither can nor will invade the United States for the following reasons. 1—Germany wants and has always wanted the friendship of the United States. Any American soldier who was billeted in Germany after the close of the World War can tell you how decently our men were treated by the Germans, even though it was we who finally made them lose the war.

What other nation in the history of the world has ever been so ready to make friends with her conquerors? (And, while we're on this topic, please tell me: What would our Navy do to Mexico's ships, if we were being blockaded by Canada, and Mexico would continually send money, food and munitions to Canada to help to starve us?)

2—The Germans, no matter how much we may hate them, are too intelligent to do such a fool thing as to attack any country across an ocean. Troops have to be landed from ships into harbors; regiments cannot be dropped from the sky. All we need is enough bomber planes to patrol our harbors, and they can finish off the enemy boats before they have a chance to land. The Germans know this very well indeed.

Mr. Hartley says that England and France are friendly to us. Well, why shouldn't they be! Didn't we impoverish our own country to pay for their war from 1914 to 1918?

Does Mr. Hartley want to drag us into another war? The American people are not ready for another depression, quite apart from the fact that our American men and boys are far too precious to be killed, blinded or crippled for Europe's quarrels.

We Stand Corrected

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Referring to your editorial in The Post of November 8 "What's the Alternative?" I'll tell you below what "the alternative" is according to Mr. Webster and myself.

Alternative: n. the option or choice of two possibilities, so that if one be rejected the other must be accepted.

If I may say so, in the case of your editorial it is one and a half alternatives and not three.

Brilliant Insight

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One sentence in your editorial, "The Russian Dilemma," provides a brilliant insight into a problem which has confused many Americans. I refer to the sentence, "It (Soviet Russia) wants peace because it knows that Russian communism, to survive, must have the aid of foreign capitalism."

I have often wondered why it was that the eminent American industrialists who are directors of the Russian-American Chamber of Commerce allow their prestige and authority to be used in sponsoring statistics which show that Russian industrial production has increased sensationally since 1929 and that Russia today is second in industrial production only to our own country while before the revolution she was also outranked by England, France and Germany.

Apparently American capitalists have been financing the Russian campaign against capitalism. Is that what you meant? Of course, I realize you might not want to be too plain about it in your editorial because these industrialists are your biggest advertisers.

But if this is what you meant, I think you should speak plainly. The Dies Committee should investigate the relations of these capitalists with Moscow. Let the chips fall where they may, I say.

Why Squawk?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: One thing puzzling me is why any individual or group of individuals would put up such a squawk because of what Representative Dies is doing for their country, if this is their country.

If things he has turned up are on the American plan why is there any cause for kicking? It sounds like guilt and an effort to put a stop to it before it can get any further.

There is nothing worse than a "Flag Saluting Hip, Hip Hurrahing Hypocrite," who uses that as a smoke screen and will fall in with any "ism" that tries to tear it down.

Motor Inspection

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The papers indicate the screws are to be tightened on the poor motorist at the inspection station. Before granting approval the citizen should bear in mind that mechanical defect is way down the scale as a cause of accidents.

I am not crying down the value of inspection, because every little bit helps, but I do say that the proposal is another example of misapplied zeal, such as the drive against downtown pedestrians while the majority of pedestrian fatalities continue unchecked and, as always, in the suburbs.

If the police are restive, let them get a few of the criminals (I have not heard that Washington leads the world as a crime-free city) or, if they insist on picking on motorists let them go after the cars that block intersections in rush hours, and the double parkers, and the hornblowers and the drivers who refuse to give the pedestrian a break at unlighted intersections. And to keep the experts busy, let them figure what proportion of rush hour traffic is circulating because parking is prohibited, or because they couldn't make a left turn and had to go eight blocks out of the way.

Historic Washington

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The members of the Southwest Citizens Association at its last meeting, on October 18, instructed the president to write a letter of congratulations to The Washington Post for the excellent series of articles written by Miss Christine Sadler depicting the historic background of Washington communities.

Our association registered a special appreciation for the manner in which the story of Southwest Washington was handled by Miss Sadler although we feel that she is deserving of commendation for the attractive style utilized by her in all of the articles portraying the growth of Washington.

I should like to suggest to you the desirability of printing all of Miss Sadler's articles in a single publication, after this series has been concluded. Its value from a historical standpoint appears assured and I am certain that many of your subscribers would be delighted to receive a copy for permanent reference.

What "Better Method?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The "Post Reader" whose article appeared in this column on November 7, states that complete isolation is the best policy. He has avoided one of the chief arguments brought forth when the arms embargo was repealed: That the United States, as one of the most powerful nations, cannot ignore the fact that there are other countries in this world

He says that isolationists and Communists have been linked as "fellow travelers." Since when has communism isolated us from the Soviet Union?

How could any nation keep its relationship with foreign countries and maintain its industries that are dependent upon foreign trade, by a better method than our leaders have offered? If the "Post Reader" can offer a suggestion, perhaps our leaders will be willing to listen to him.

Inter-American Relations Conference

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In view of the coming conference on Inter-American Relations in the Field of Education scheduled for November 9 and 10, under the sponsorship of the division of cultural relations of the Department of State, the readers of your newspaper would no doubt be interested to read of the work of Dr. Frederick Kettner who is attending the conference as representative of the Inter-American Friendship Center, whose purpose is to establish closer relations with our neighbors to the South.

On September 19, 1939, Dr. Kettner stood before the microphone at the short wave station WGEO, Schenectady, N. Y., and directed a message of friendship directly to the branch of the Inter-American Friendship Center at Buenos Aires, Argentina. The New York branch of the Inter-American Friendship Center promptly received an enthusiastic reply from our southern friends.

Such an activity is an example of how friendship can be built up between men and women, though they are separated by 6,000 miles of ocean, though they speak different languages, and though they adhere, on the whole, to different religious principles.

On July 2 there was held at the New York World's Fair the world premiere of the documentary film "World Leaders on Peace and Democracy" featuring Cordell Hull, Robert A. Taft, Albert Einstein, Thomas Mann, Harold L. Ickes, Eduard Benes, Nicholas Murray Butler, Frederick Kettner, Harold C. Urey and Arthur H. Compton.

This film, which was sponsored by the Inter-American Friendship Center and other interested organizations, was shown throughout the summer at the New York World's Fair, and is now being released for showing throughout the Nation. Plans are being formulated to have it shown throughout the American continents also. It has been hailed by many leaders as one of the most significant documentary films ever made, and it will do much to bolster up the spirit of democracy in these critical times.

These examples of an inter-American organization at work shows how private organizations first carry on activities which are later recognized and sponsored by governments. Two of the objects of the newly created division of cultural relations are to sponsor international cultural broadcasts and to exchange international friendship films.

I believe the efforts of Cordell Hull and the State Department in inaugurating these cultural activities will contribute to designate this Administration as one of the most constructive Administrations ever to be at the helm in Washington.

Coketown

IF YOU'RE looking for sociological surprises, go to Coketown, city of coke ovens, city of discarded men. In Coketown you will see how men live in the ovens like rats in holes burrowed out of the hillside.

Coketown you'll find at the foot of a sharp bluff on which Shag Town breeds; and Shag Town is a suburb of Fairmont, W. Va.—looked upon by that city as a sort of "poor white trash relations," if suburban precincts can be allegorized for purposes of illustration.

In West Virginia coal is king, and coal is sometimes processed in kilns to obtain a quick-burning fuel known as "coke." These kilns are igloo-shaped and generally constructed of brick and, as in the case of Coketown, most of them are backed up against a hill—though where, in West Virginia, could they be backed up against anything else?

In Coketown there are perhaps a dozen of these ovens, but their original function has long since been abandoned. At one time their fires glowed like giant embers in the night, but they have been cold now many years and their ashes still lie on the furnace floors, cremated reminders of the vicissitudes of coal.

Today the ovens decay in the shadows of the bluff below Shag Town. But coal still uses them. Crumbling, abandoned, they still function in the service of the king—not in the fueling of a new industry, as in the old days; not in the kilning of its by-products, but to harbor the men that coal has discarded.

Here, living with the ashes of a dead commerce, is another by-product of coal—men maimed by the mines. Some of them are physically incapacitated, crippled by run-away cars, or "squeezes" or slate falls. Others are psychologically unfit for employment. But, one way or the other, they're a refuse of the industry.

To get to Coketown means a criss-cross descent of the bluff and a trek up the railroad tracks, for Coketown overlooks a B. & O. artery that parallels the Monongahela River. It stands on the shelf of an embankment which is 2 or 3 feet high and perhaps 10 yards back from the tracks, and extends for about 50 yards along the foot of the bluff, crouched back into the shadows as if trying to hide its ulcers from the passing trains.

It takes but one look, however, to discern the ways in which squalor can breed in the poverty that begets it; how life can be dumped on the trash heaps of society and still breed maggots of existence. For you will see, everywhere you look, discarded essentials of living—derelict men, abandoned ovens of industry, battered utensils, broken implements—civilization's flotsam achieving a makeshift survivall

The ovens themselves are not as tall as the men who live in them, and their earthen interiors can be measured by the length of a man on his back. This means a crouched occupancy of the abodes, but in a haven so dark and fetid and cramped might a man not crouch anyhow?

In this respect, Sam Smith, a Negro who occupies the first oven, has the advantage on his neighbors. He is crippled in his haunches and permanently crouched—and he has a slate fall to thank for this thoughtful foresight.

Sam, you'll find, is the most loquacious of the lot. They're a secretive people, the natives, and often a man will not know the name of his neighbor—or so he professes. To such questions you get only a secretive trapdoor flung over suspicion; but then, visitors are not welcome in Coketown.

With Sam, it's different. If you approach him in the right spirit he will squat on his haunches in his crumbling doorway and talk to you.

Everywhere you look, both inside and out, you'll see evidences of his excursions to the rubbish heap. Lamed pieces of lumber, patches of tarpaulin, scraps of tin, all manner of derelict odds and ends litter his puny yard. He has always "aimed to do somepun wif 'em—build him a lean-to," but he never has.

A lean-to, he will tell you, serves the practical purpose of keeping out the weather—since the doorways are doorless. Some of his neighbors, with more thought to creature comfort than Sam, have erected them—crude structures of patched roofs slanting over the face of the ovens on unstable props; and the doorways they have tried to close with patchwork. But even in those instances of manual improvement the seasons have a way of creeping in through the cracks.

In Coketown black men and white men have colonized for reasons of survival; and population fluctuates with the uncertain fortunes of coal. There are, however, always the 10 or 12 natives occupying the ovens and as many as 3 transients at a time—drifters who, in their migrations from one coal field to another, find temporary abode in these makeshift havens.

Drifters are not "visitors," for visitors have no credentials of dereliction, and are therefore under suspicion. It might be, in the case of the transient, that questions are asked before hospitality is offered, but it is more likely that the matter is one which concerns only the man who harbors the drifter. If he is murdered in his sleep, that is his affair.

Death in this form of untimely demise doesn't concern them—it's the daily problem of survival that does!

Ham 'n' Eggs Origin

HUEY LONG adopted or stole his title of Kingfish from a mythical colored character in the Amos 'n' Andy program, and the slogan ham-and-eggs, which had bewitched millions of Americans in California and elsewhere in the Southwest, also springs from an origin so absurd that the story of its adoption as a great political cry cannot be told without a sense of shame and fear. Ham-and-eggs signifies comfort and plenty, and the phrase has an alarming sound when shouted at random, like hallelujah, by bitter men and women on the fringes of shapeless crowds.

In Pershing Square, in Los Angeles, such crowds gather and scatter of a day, but toward evening the sound of oratory rises sharply, like the cheeping of the starlings at sundown in the niches of the masonry in Washington. Then for two or three hours the discussion is general. It cannot be called debate, for there is almost no dissenting opinion. Groups come together, break up and eddy into new groups like little creatures in a drop of swamp water under a microscope, and above the angry notes of the spellbinders, most of whom bear the recognizable marks of the Communist provocator, the cry is heard, "ham-and-eggs."

They Started Day By Singing Doggerel

FOR A LONG TIME, dating way back into the era of wonderful nonsense when Los Angeles was confident and Republican, a group of local right-thinkers, businessmen, doctors and the like, constituting in all a perfect congress of babbittry, have had a grewsome custom of meeting at a public restaurant at 7 o'clock on Thursday mornings to breakfast together. It may be said that any breed of people who would assemble in a mass in a spirit of determined, almost muscular, conviviality, to start the day singing stupid doggerel and shouting hearty witticisms, deserve any consequence of their folly. It may be added in extenuation, however, that the desert sun shines bright in Los Angeles early in the morning so that people cannot sleep on. Therefore, the babbitts bound brightly from their beds in a mood to beam upon their fellow men, and in this spirit gather once a week to breakfast jovially on ham and eggs.

They are the men who, 10 or 15 years ago, were described as forward-looking and as architects of a brilliant future, and out of their quick and flashing wit they developed a traditional salutation. Traditions ripen quickly in a new country, and in no time at all these genial giants of trade and science in Los Angeles were greeting one another thus: "Hello, Ham!" and "Hello, Eggs!"

Poet Among Them Composed Song

SOME POET among them made a song. Such songs always are sung to the tune of Tammany or Casey Jones. This one was a Tammany song. It goes as follows:

Ham 'n eggs,
Ham 'n' eggs,
I like mine fried good and brown,
I like mine fried upside down.
Ham 'n' eggs,
Ham 'n' eggs,
Flip 'em, flop 'em,
Flap 'em, drop 'em,
Ham 'n' eggs,

Their envied company included, from time to time, Mr. Willis Allen, a real estate salesman and go-getter who had been a cheer leader at the University of Southern California.

Allen Muscles In On Pension Racket

MR. ALLEN was successful only in blurts, and when, after many disappointments, he muscled in on the scrip-stamp pension racket a few years ago he brought to his new work a slogan which signified to the poor not only food in the plain, homely, folksy version but a promise of parity with the aristocrats of commerce. He had led the singing of "ham 'n' eggs" at the breakfast parties, and he now promised the poor $30 every Thursday, the traditional breakfast day of those whose opinions were quoted in the papers and the capacity to buy ham and eggs every day in the week without working.

They were to send him one cent a day, plus special contributions solicited from time to time; they were to work without pay as precinct organizers, enlisting other joiners at a penny a day, and in return, though California might go broke and they might lose their American rights, they would get ham-and-eggs.

Young Roosevelt Sounds Plea for Roll Call Drive

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 9.—Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., a third-year student in the law school at the University of Virginia, was the guest speaker at the annual workers' luncheon of the Albemarle Chapter of the Red Cross this afternoon at the Monticello Hotel.

More than a half hundred business men heard young Roosevelt's plea for a liberal response to the annual roll call. He pointed out that 165 volunteer workers are now engaged at the offices of the local chapter in making garments and surgical dressings which will be sent abroad, and that increased funds are needed to purchase supplies.

This was the second appearance of young Roosevelt before a Charlottesville audience. During his first year at the university he addressed a group of Boy Scouts.

Hitler Must Move

By Barnet Nover

Holland Prepares For The Worst

ON REPEATED occasions since Hitler's Reichstag speech of October 6, Nazi spokesmen have warned the Allies that rejection of the Fuehrer's peace bid would compel the Third Reich to wage "war in earnest."

This diplomatic offensive fell flat from the very outset. But so far it has had no military sequel. The stalemate on the Western Front has persisted. Germany has carefully refrained from any real effort to break through the Maginot Line. She has limited her offensive action to minor military forays in the Moselle sector, occasional aerial raids on British naval concentrations and submarine warfare against Allied and neutral shipping.

GERMANY'S FAILURE to carry out her threats has been puzzling. It has been suggested by way of explanation that, threats or no threats, Hitler had to hold his hand until there had been a clarification of Russian policy. A large-scale offensive in the west might, it was pointed out, leave the way open for further Soviet penetration into regions once regarded by the Nazis as Germany's "Lebensraum."

This explanation probably has some validity. But an equally valid reason for Hitler's hesitation to unleash his thunderbolts against the Allies is that such action, under present circumstances, is certain to fail. And the Reich's military leaders, realizing this unpleasant fact, probably have persuaded the Fuehrer to sit tight while they work out the difficult strategic problem of overcoming Allied resistance despite the formidable barrier represented by the Maginot Line.

THERE HAVE BEEN some, however, who have argued on the basis of the persistent lull on the Western Front that Germany has no intention of taking the offensive at all but will sit behind the Siegfried Line and try to outwait the Allies.

She could do so, and successfully, it has been said, if through submarine warfare plus air raids on Allied warships and Allied and neutral merchant vessels, the blockade could be broken. Thus, instead of being starved out, Germany would starve out the Allies.

THE TROUBLE with this theory is that, while logical, it ignores the nature of the Nazi system. At no time since he came into power in 1933 has Hitler been able to wait for events to take their course. He has always been in a hurry. In part, that may have been the result of the Fuehrer's own temperament. But in large measure it arose out of the explosive pressures generated by the kind of system Hitler has imposed on the Reich.

This has been particularly noticeable during the past year. When Germany annexed the Sudetenland, the rest of Czecho-Slovakia was reduced to the role of satellite state. The Munich settlement also assured Germany of economic primacy in all of central and southeastern Europe.

But Hitler could not wait for the fruit to ripen and fall painlessly into his lap. In March, German troops marched into Prague. In September, despite stern British and French warning, the attack on Poland began.

DEMOCRATIC nations may afford the blessed luxury of inaction, if not overprolonged. Totalitarian nations cannot. The only real question regarding Hitler's course has not been whether he would take the offensive but where.

To that question it has not been possible to give any certain answer. Several courses are open to the Reich; none of them is easy. The most difficult would be an attempt to break through on the Western Front. The one involving the greatest exercise of patience is a war of naval attrition. The least dangerous from a military point of view would be an attack on the Netherlands for the purpose of securing air and naval bases within easier striking distance of Great Britain. That course of action is handicapped, however, by the consideration that no possible pretext has existed for such an aggression against a neutral which has leaned backward in observing a correct attitude toward the Reich.

SUCH AN ATTACK can no longer be dismissed as an impossibility. The doughty burghers of the Netherlands are under no illusions on that score. Neither is their Queen. The peace proposal launched by the rulers of the Low Countries was inspired in large part by fear that if peace is not achieved in the near future these two countries may be the next to be crushed by the German juggernaut.

Holland is today in mortal peril. Her impeccable conduct may not save her, and Hitler's promises to respect her neutrality may prove as little binding as were his other promises.

In the meantime the Munich beer-hall version of the Reichstag fire suggests that the Nazi regime has felt the need of a dramatic gesture to prepare the German public either for a new wave of external violence or for a drastic internal purge or, as is most likely, for both.

The alleged attempt on his life gives Hitler a talking point for a campaign of hatred against England so violent as to obscure a possible assault on the Netherlands. It also gives him the pretext, if he wants to exercise it, for a house-cleaning of all disgruntled elements particularly among the Nazis themselves.

Now as throughout his meteoric career Hitler is acting on the premise expounded in "Mein Kampf" that a lie will be accepted if it is big enough and often enough repeated.

Neutrality 'Evasion'

By Ernest K. Lindley

The Ship Transfer

THE UNITED STATES LINE'S plan to keep 9 of its 11 transatlantic vessels in that service by transferring their registry to Panama is so slick that it is bound to invoke the charge that it is an evasion of the plain intent of the neutrality act.

Until Secretary Hull, on second thought, drew back, it had the nod of approval from all parties concerned in the Administration, from the President down. There is ground for thinking that even if persons high in the Administration were not co-authors of this scheme, they knew about it before Congress had finished its debate on the neutrality bill.

The outcry is not confined to those who opposed the Administration on the arms embargo question. Senator Schwellenbach, of Washington, calls this plan an "outrageous" evasion, and Senator Pepper, of Florida, described it as "improper." They are two of the President's most loyal supporters on domestic issues and foreign policy alike. Why Secretary Hull changed his mind is, therefore, easy to understand. The difficulty is in understanding why he made no objection in the first instance or why any responsible official thought that the transfer of registry could have been proposed—at least so soon after passage of the neutrality act—without eliciting charges of bad faith.

GOOD FAITH is at the heart of this controversy. The Administration obtained the repeal of the arms embargo only by its concessions to those who insisted that effective measures be taken to prevent the recurrence of the incidents which were the occasion, if not the underlying cause, for our entry into the World War in 1917. From the insistence of the so-called "isolationists" sprang the prohibition against travel on belligerent ships by American citizens and the cash-and-carry provisions.

In response to the earnest representations of American shipping interests, the stringent restrictions originally proposed on the movement of American ships were relaxed, first in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and then on the floor of the Senate. Permission was granted to American ships to sail to the ports of belligerent nations, first in the Western Hemisphere, then in the Pacific and Indian oceans, the Tasmanian Sea, and the South Atlantic and, finally, Bermuda. The restrictions were thus whittled down until the prohibition extended only to belligerent ports in Europe and northern Africa, plus such neutral ports as the President should declare to be in dangerous zones of combat.

Ostensibly, the American shipping interests put all their cards on the table. By doing so, they won great concessions and a bargain was struck which seemed to be generally acceptable.

NOW, IT HAS become evident, the shipping companies in the transatlantic trade had what they believed to be an ace up their sleeve—and, as has been noted, there is ground for thinking the Administration knew it was there while the neutrality act was still being debated.

If this card had been shown, the neutrality act might have been quite different from what it is. Or, it might not have been. On its merits the proposed transfer to Panama can be defended with reasonable arguments. Of course, it is just a piece of local legerdemain, a paper transaction. The ships remain American-owned. They continue to sail from American ports to northern European ports. However, they fly a different flag and their American officers and crews are replaced by foreigners. Legally, the United States would have solid ground for protest if they were sent to the bottom, one or all, by German torpedoes.

Whether, under so thin a disguise, all of our emotional interest in the fate of these ships would evaporate, is an open question. And would the owners accept the destruction of these ships with stoical calm, without trying to revive the old Wilsonian policy—repudiated by the neutrality act—of trying to throw a protective arm about all merchant shipping on the high seas?

IN THE NINE SHIPS it is proposed to transfer our Government no longer has a direct financial interest. They are fairly aged craft, the youngest being 17 years old and the older ones being of the Hog Island type begun during the World War for troop transport service. However, the Maritime Commision had thought them valuable enough to subsidize their operation to the extent of about $1,000,000 per year. This subsidy would stop with their transfer to foreign registry. And, of course, if they should be needed as naval auxiliaries they could be transferred back with a few hours paper work.

There is nothing illegal about the proposed transfer, although the transaction smacks of the trickery for which New Dealers have often berated big business and businessmen have often berated the New Deal. And it is strange to hear the President, whose continual plea it has been that the rights of private property must be tempered by regard for the public welfare, resorting to a narrow legalistic argument about the rights of ship owners to dispose of their private property as they please—especially when this is a business which is so thoroughly endowed with a public interest that it depends on Government subsidy.

This transfer plan clearly raises questions which should be debated and settled by Congress. However persuasive the arguments in favor of it may be, they will overcome with extreme difficulty the feeling that there was bad faith in the failure of the shipping interests and the Administration to show their whole hands while Congress still was in a session called for the sole purpose of determining what the American neutrality policy should be.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

The Second Beer Hall Putsch

THE SECOND beer hall putsch, like the first, which it gruesomely intended to celebrate, failed. But, like the first, it throws some light upon what is going on, behind the scenes, in the Third Reich.

We must construct a picture of life behind the Westwall from a few meager clews. For the rest, all is silence, except for the roar of the propaganda guns. Nevertheless, there are clews, and there is logic, and sufficient information to allow one to speculate.

First of all, there is the position of the Reich, at this moment, engaged in a sullen, simmering war with Great Britain and France. This Reich is "encircled," and the encirclement has been completed, not by the Allies, but by Soviet Russia, under the mask of a pact of friendship.

Russia is entrenched in the Baltic as she has never been since 1913.

Common Frontier For Reich, Soviet

THE REICH and the Soviet Union have a common frontier in Poland. The Soviet Union now has a common frontier with Hungary, and, as always, with Rumania. At any moment, the frontier with Rumani may be extended deeper into Europe by taking Bessarabia. Rumania is guaranteed against German aggression by Great Britain and France, but she is not guaranteed against Soviet aggression.

The taking of Bessarabia would bring Russia perilously near the mouth of the Danube and extend Russian control over the Black Sea.

Meanwhile the Balkan countries draw together under the leadership of Turkey, who is in an alliance with Great Britain.

Mr. Ribbentrop's great coup—the Russo-German pact—has completed the encirclement which Hitler feared and denounced.

That Hitler really trusts Stalin or Stalin Hitler is difficult to believe.

And Molotoff's last speech, in which he put Nazi Germany together with Great Britain and France as guilty of war mongering for imperialist reasons, leaves the Reich out on a limb. Hitler can say, as he did on Wednesday, "We never feared two fronts; now we have only one front," but the words make no sense. Germany has only one front, but in the east she is in the position of a country that has already lost a war and has had the peace terms dictated on very disadvantageous terms.

Now, there are certainly patriots in Germany who are aware of this—aware of the desperate national position into which the clique of adventurers who have run the country for the last six years have maneuvered it.

If they engage in a mass attack in the west, what is going to happen to them, meanwhile, in the east? And how can they engage in a mass attack in the west? It is possible that the Maginot Line can be broken, but only at a prodigious cost in materials and men. It is a question whether any nation in the world today is strong enough to undertake this kind of totalitarian warfare, indeed. But that is another story—the "total" war may mean the reductio ad absurdum of war.

Lowlands Are Only Opening To West

LEAVING THE MATTER of replacement of materials aside, what will be the effect upon the masses of a war which slaughters millions—in Germany or in any other country?

What will be the effect of Russian propaganda in the midst of mass carnage?

It will be effective in all countires, but Germany has opened her gates widest to it, because of the Russo-German pact.

The only other way westward is through the neutral countries. But an attack on Holland or Belgium would be politically disastrous. It would make Nazi Germany the worst aggressor, solidify the opinion of the world against Hitler and remove his own best propaganda weapon.

Meanwhile, the British have a standing offer of peace with a non-Nazi government. This must appeal to many German patriots. There is, therefore, the best possible reason for wanting to get rid of the Nazi leadership before Germany is given over to bolshevism or defeated in war, or both.

That might explain the attempted assassination of the whole crowd—significantly minus Goering, because the parole has gone around that a Goering government might be acceptable to the western powers. When the bomb exploded, Hitler and his second choice as a successor, Rudolph Hess, were supposed to be caught by it, Goering was in Berlin.

Nazi Party Always Had Two Wings

BUT ONE CAN SPECULATE also, along other lines. The Nazi Party has always had a right wing and a left wing. The rightists were those in the army, junker and industrial classes, who welcomed Nazism as a bulwark against communism, or hoped through it to increase the armed might, or looked upon it as a movement for achieving internal unity.

The leftists were very close to the Communists. Some of them even called themselves "national Bolshevists." They were the crowd who were theoretically "purged" in 1934.

But you cannot purge millions of people, and Germany, after the war, was always more left than right.

The followers of the assassinated Roehm always had a secret group inside the Nazi ranks—the so-called RRS. "Revenge for Roehm." They wanted a real alliance with the Soviet Union—without Hitler, whom they have never forgiven.

Leftists Wanted Front With Russia

THEY WERE active in Czecho-Slovakia, among the Czech Communists. Their ranks inside the Nazi Party have been augmented in the past two years by genuine Communists, former members of the German Communist Party, who abandoned the underground movement outside the Nazi ranks in order to conduct a far more important and dangerous underground movement inside the ranks.

They want to join with the Soviet Union, in a common Communist front from the Rhine to Vladivostok. Their policy has not yet wholly succeeded. Curiously, they also have considerable following in the army ranks, who think that only with an outright military alliance with the Soviet Union can they hope to defeat the western powers.

So perhaps it was they who planted the bomb.

And Where Was The Gestapo?

OF COURSE, THE NAZIS say that it was done by "British agents." If it was, the British have achieved a coup far more amazing than the sinking of the Royal Oak in Scapa Flow. To smuggle a time bomb into the Munich beer hall, is about as difficult as smuggling one into Hitler's eagle's nest above Berchtesgaden. Any place where the Nazi inner circle foregather with their Fuehrer is guarded in every conceivable way. Whoever placed that bomb must have been absolutely persona grata with the Gestapo.

And where was the famous Gestapo? What will happen now, to Henrich Himmler? And what is the real politics of the Gestapo, anyhow? Like all secret police armed with uncontrollable power, it is a state within a state, and the leader is led as well as leading.

If British agents are buddies with the Gestapo, and able to engineer such a coup, then the famed secret police have been taken for a ride, and it is nothing for the Nazis to brag about.

How Can Nazis Trust Each Other?

THE EFFECT OF THIS putsch that did not succeed in its immediate objective, will certainly be enormous. How are Nazis to trust each other now? Whom will Hitler really trust?

The Volkischer Beobachter says "Now all the enemies of the state still in the territory of the greater German Reich will be cleaned out!"

Yes, but who are these enemies? If they are not the British secret service, who are they? The Czechs, and the Poles, and the conservatives horrified by the Russo-German pact, and the men in the army who find the pact not enough for military safety and too much for civil safety, and the millions of former Communists who want to use the Russian pact to destroy the Nazis, and the "Red" Nazis who believe the only hope for Germany is practical union with Soviet Russia—these are all enemies of Hitler, and where shall he begin his "combing?"

Party's Ranks Must Be Split

A GOVERNMENT FOUNDED on conspiracy and maintained by party camarillas and secret police, cannot trust its own population, but above all, it cannot trust the very men to whom it gives such unlimited power.

It is impossible that the brotherly love asserted between Hitler and Stalin should have been accomplished without the most serious divisions inside the Nazi party ranks. It is impossible that men who enlisted to fight communism should find the line-up reversed and maintain complete docility.

In logic, the Nazi party ranks must be divided. The attempt in the beer cellar records the fact, but what disgruntled groups were responsible? Does Hitler believe that if he assassinates what remains of the long-cowed Jews, he will find the culprits? Must he not be looking searchingly into his presence behind a servile salute?

I'm Whoozitt, the Bunny,
And—isn't it funny?—
They tell me I haven't a dad;
I came from a college,
I frankly acknowledge,
Through salt and such things as they had.

II.
I'm merely a rabbit
But hardly a Babbit—
In fact I am very unique:
A parthenogenetic
Young rabbit synthetic . . .
A very good trick, so to speak!

III.
You never would know it—
In fact I don't show it—
I'm just like a rabbit with "folks,"
There's nothing about me
To make one point out me
As one of Doc Pincus's jokes.

IV.
I hop and I gambol
I sleep or I ramble;
At cabbage leaves gaily I grab;
I have the same features
As better born creatures
Whose dads didn't live in a "lab."

V.
I'm just as good looking
As rabbits whose booking
Was not via Harvard and Clark;
In fact as a bunny
I'm really a honey
Who might have been born in the park.

VI.
I'm not the least bitter
Through lack of a litter;
No sisters or brothers have I.
But science, oh, mister,
Can find me a sister
I'm certain, if it will but try.

VII.
I'll ne'er make the Blue Book
But medicine's new book
Will fully explain how I came;
I'm hoping quite blindly
For Winchell's view kindly
And no paragraphs on my name.

VIII.
The gossips? Oh, well, sir,
They'll probably tell, sir,
But I mustn't care what they say
These days it can date you
To have people state you
Were born in the old-fashioned way.

Her conscience says, "My, but I feel like a louse,"
As she slips out for one and consumes maybe two,
And vows* "that's the last" and with a final "I'm through!"

D. C. Tattooer Reports Revival Of Flags on Patriotic Bosoms

Young Human Flagstaffs Favor American Motif but Nary a Congressman Has Asked For Even as Much as a Statue of Liberty

By Eddy Gilmore.
Associated Press Staff Writer

All the American flags aren't being put on the sides of American ships—a lot of them are going onto Americans themselves.

"It's true," said Einar Kluge, a tattooer, who's been doing business three blocks from the Capitol for almost a decade. "Flags are getting popular again."

He didn't mean that American flags ever were unpopular in Washington. He meant that flags on flesh are in vogue.

Most of the fellows who recently have become human flagstaffs are young men. Some have been in the armed services, but there have been others.

One client complained that he had been wearing a flag in his coat lapel for ten years.

"I bet I've lost 50 of them," he said. "I want one that will stick."

The tattooer has his shop on historic Pennsylvania avenue. Presidents have ridden by on their way to and from inaugurations. Legislators have walked past. Kluge has seen some of them glancing in his windows.

But—he hates to admit it—not one Congressman has ever come in for a flag, or even so much as a small Statute of Liberty.

240 Officers Of Army Listed For Promotion

Two hundred and forty Army officers were promoted yesterday in one of the largest advancement lists of peacetime.

Promotion of most of the officers had been held up due to the Administration desire to confine the recent special session of Congress to neutrality legislation. Had they been made when due, the new appointments must have been sent to the Senate for confirmation. Now they will not go to Congress until January.

In the list were 30 new colonels, 49 lieutenant colonels, 87 majors, 14 captains and 70 first lieutenants. None of the group will lose precedence or pay by the delay, as their new rank will be predated.

Ballou Cites U. S. Need of Skilled Labor

Educator Speaks At Dedication of J. A. Chamberlain Vocational School

Scarcity of young men entering skilled trades is causing concern to national defense planners, Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, declared last night.

"Vocational training is the answer to this problem," he said at the dedication of the John A. Chamberlain Vocational School, Potomac avenue between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets southeast.

Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education, declared the new building was "a monument to the dignity of labor."

Reed Praises Teachers

The structure, she stated, would achieve its purpose if students graduated "as happy and useful citizens, convinced that work is both honorable and satisfying."

Edward D. Reed, principal, paid tribute to the "little band of teachers, loyal and understanding, who could see the importance of their work even before this fine building was in view."

A portrait of the late John A. Chamberlain, supervisor of manual training, for whom the school is named, was presented by Frank Daniels, principal of McKinley High School.

Others at Services

Others attending the services were William A. Maio, president of the Southeast Washington Citizens Association; Orrin J. Davy, president of the Southeast Council of Citizens Associations; Robert L. Haycock, first assistant superintendent in charge of high schools; Lawson J. Cantrell, assistant superintendent in charge of junior high schools; Harold A. Clark, head of the Department of Vocational Education; Dorothy Devaughn, president of the Chamberlain School Student Council, and Capt. John L. Person, representing the Board of Commissioners. The Rev. Edward Gabler, of Christ Episcopal Church, 620 E street southeast, gave the invocation and benediction. Music was provided by the McKinley High School Orchestra.

Dedicatory exercises also were held for the annex and assembly hall at the Giddings School, Third and G streets southeast.

Dr. Garnet C. Wilkinson, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, made the principal address, tracing development of the educational program in the southeast section, where the first colored school was established 75 years ago, and congratulating the community on the opportunity for development of a modern educational program by reason of the superior facilities of the new building and auditorium.

Police Captain Speaks

Development of a safety program by cooperation between the schools and the Police Department, was discussed by Capt. Joseph C. Morgan, of the Fifth Precinct. The invocation was said by the Rev. J. L. S. Holloman, and the benediction by the Rev. F. F. King. A tour of the building was conducted under direction of Mrs. S. E. Gray, administrative principal.

Col. West A. Hamilton accepted the building for the Board of Education. John G. Bruce, supervising principal of the Thirteenth Division, presided.

Dr. Carter G. Woodson, director of the Association for Study of Negro Life and History, spoke yesterday at Shaw Junior High School, where exercises concluding celebration of National Education Week were held in two assembly programs.

Noble Addresses Census Banquet

More facts about the people of the United States and their businesses will be garnered by census takers this year than ever before, Edward J. Noble, Undersecretary of Commerce, last night told some 200 key workers in the 1940 census who ended a six-weeks course of training with a banquet at the Mayflower Hotel.

Other speakers included Col. J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce; Dr. Vergil D. Reed, assistant director of the Census Bureau; Howard S. Drew, assistant to the census director; Emmons K. Ellsworth, chief, field division of the Census Bureau; J. C. Capt, special assistant to the census director, and Gerald Ryan, director of the training school.

Capital News In Brief

Pedestrian Is Held

Florian Lewis Frillman, 42, of 1108 Forty-fourth place southeast, was being held by police at 2 a. m. today on a pedestrian regulation charge.

Arrested at Eighth and M streets southeast by Patrolman J. E. O'Neal for crossing against a red light, he refused to post $2 collateral, though he had the money. Fifth Precinct police said he told them that if he is convicted in Police Court today, he will serve out a sentence rather than pay a fine.

Irish Terrier Found

A handsome brown and black Irish terrier is in the District Pound, waiting for its missing owner to appear, Frank B. Marks, poundmaster, said yesterday. The dog was found near the British Embassy on Massachusetts avenue northwest Wednesday, Marks said.

Hurt on Safety Island

The pedestrian safety islands at Thirteenth and F streets northwest claimed their fourth victim of the week yesterday. Mrs. Mary E. Doyle, 53, of 2100 Massachusetts avenue northwest, fell on the concrete step and suffered minor injuries.

Three other pedestrians have fallen over the raised platform.

Wesley Heights a Community That Asks Nothing, Mr. Hazen

By Hedley Donovan.

Post Staff Writer

Congress and the Commissioners may not believe it, but there is one Washington neighborhood without a citizens' association or civic grievance.

The contented subdivision, Wesley Heights and Spring Valley, covers 400 acres in Northwest Washington and half a dozen pages in the Social Register.

Sixteen years ago there were only three residences and a few farms in the heavily wooded, rolling upland tract out Massachusetts avenue. Most of the trees still stand today, but in their shelter are some 700 homes built to sell at prices between $10,000 and $150,000.

May Need Grade School

The two communities were developed by the real estate firm of W. C. and A. N. Miller. Spring Valley, on the company's maps, is bounded by the Dalecarlia Reservoir grounds, Massachusetts avenue, the American University campus and Loughboro road.

Wesley Heights is bordered by parkland on three sides—the Glover-Archbold park to the east, the Fort drive to the west and on the south the spur connecting the two recreation areas. Foxhall road and New Mexico avenue mark the northern limits of Wesley Heights.

"We may need another grade school out here eventually," A. N. Miller said yesterday, "but we're not asking for a thing right now. We have been very well taken care of."

Morris Ervin, president of the Wesley Heights and Spring Valley Community Club, was in the same frame of mind yesterday. The club is "purely social," he pointed out, and offhand he could recall only one occasion when the organization "asked for anything downtown."

Club Is Unique

"There had been some talk of turning a building in the Glover-Archbold Park into a theater," he said, "and the people at that end of Wesley Heights were opposed to the idea. It was brought up in a very informal way at a meeting of the club's officers and I believe they asked someone to go down to the District Building and see about the thing." There is no theater in the park.

The Community Club, at Forty-fifth and Macomb streets northwest, is unique in Washington. All residents of Wesley Heights and Silver Spring are entitled to belong, and most of them do. A family membership costs $3 a year.

"There's a certain amount of embarrassment from time to time when the club treasury runs up a surplus," Ervin explained. "Then we have to scrape the floor or buy some Venetian blinds."

The club sponsors dances, golf tournaments, ping pong games, bridge luncheons, songfests, movies for the children. Sunday night suppers and Fourth of July fireworks.

The Rev. William A. Keese, pastor of Metropolitan Methodist Church, agrees that Wesley Heights "is like a small town in many ways."

Patterned after the Sainte Chapelle in Paris, the Metropolitan Church dominates the northern skyline of Wesley Heights. The $367,000 structure was built in 1932, when the church outgrew its old home at John Marshall place and C street.

The church, club and Horace Mann School are the only public buildings in Wesley Heights and Spring Valley. Three shops are housed in the club building.

Bus Driver Is News Source

A bus operated by the Miller firm takes Spring Valley children to school and links the community with the Capital Transit Co.'s lines.

The driver of the bus and one-man neighborhood "newspaper" is "Herbie" Carter. Herbie doesn't live there himself, but is valued by his passengers as an unrivaled source of information.

Herbie's only peer is L. Richmond Keech, Wesley Heights patrolman for 10 years. Now retired and living with his son, who is vice chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, Keech still takes a lively interest in Wesley Heights affairs.

Wesley Heights streets were mapped out on the gridiron plan in 1891 but were not cut through until 1923, when the Millers acquired the property. There are now 500 homes in the community and five under construction. "We have room for about 50 more," Miller says. The subdivision "got its good Methodist name" from officials of American University, according to Miller.

The real estate men thought up "Spring Valley." Laid out in 1928 in cooperation with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, Spring Valley's curving streets follow the land's natural contours.

The neighborhood baffles taxi drivers, but delights nature lovers.

Civic Group Seeks Zoning Protection

A. U. Park Citizens Act to Safeguard Restricted Residential Status of Area

A zoning policy to protect the restricted residential status of their area was asked last night by members of the American University Park Citizens Association following a discussion of "spot zoning" practices.

Vincent Smith moved that the group ask a cessation of spot zoning throughout the District, but action on this was delayed pending report of a committee now making a zoning map of American University Park.

James E. Maxwell, president, called attention to the significance of zoning changes, particularly as they might affect Massachusetts avenue, and recommended "that all facts be on the table before we act."

The association went on record favoring completion of the rifle range at Woodrow Wilson High School within the next year.

Dancing Classes Sought

Secretary M. R. Wilkes was instructed to write a letter to Lewis R. Barrett, co-ordinator of recreation in the District, asking that classes in dancing and other community recreational activities be reopened immediately.

"The new recreation division is not functioning properly. A number of these classes have not been started up. I understand Mr. Barrett is waiting for the community to show a desire for the activity," Henry L. Colman, former president of the group, declared.

"Poaching" activities of other citizenship groups were deplored by Thomas E. Lodge, also a former president. He said that citizens' associations in Washington have a hard time maintaining their boundaries because of the encroachment of other groups, some of whom "appoint membership solicitors for them to work on a commission basis."

Dr. E. W. Higgins and Robert Morrow led a spirited discussion on the merits of "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington." Dr. Higgins asked the association to go on record against showing of the picture, which, he said, represents the city in a wholly untrue light and "can only make a laughing stock of law and order."

Resents Implications

"I was a page in the Senate two years and I resent all the implications in the picture, and think them perfectly disgusting. Worse than that, I'm afraid it is the beginning of a series that tends to shoot holes in the American system of government. These things go in waves," he declared.

Morrow said he considered the picture contained many beautiful shots of the city and that "it will do us a lot of good."

A. R. Pilkerton reported to the members on "Why Your Taxes Have Gone Up." He said his study had shown him the assessed value of land in American University Park had just about doubled in the last five years and that he believed most of the tax increase was due to growth of the area. His report was continued until the next meeting, in an effort to clear up "cases that seem too far out of bounds."

Washingtonians Society

Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer last night prophesied a cut in District traffic accidents as a result of the examination of automobiles at inspection stations, at a meeting of the Society of Washingtonians.

VanDuzer also pointed to the success of parking meters as a partial solution to the parking problem.

45 Americans From 20 Nations Are Awarded Diplomas by District Naturalization School

Three good Americans—Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Koppel and their daughter, Lore (right)

Woman, 65, From Russia, Walter Reed Soldier and German Family Pledge Allegiance to the Stars and Stripes

A man, his wife and 15-year-old daughter, a Walter Reed Army private, a woman, 65, who had studied nine years for the examination—these and 40 others last night received the public schools' stamp of citizenship.

Representatives of 20 nationalities—among them 24 who received final papers last Tuesday—were given diplomas by the District Americanization School for completion of courses that had led to their naturalization.

They packed into a classroom where they heard speeches of congratulation from a half dozen of their teachers who then asked them their own views about "education in democracy."

Mrs. Kate Tendler, 453 Irving street northwest, a 65-year-old former Russian, told of her confusion in learning the new tongue. "I always got the g's and h's mixed up," she said, then declared "This has been a wonderful education in democracy."

MRS. KATE TENDLER

Pledges allegiance to flag

Oscar Koppel, of 3000 Cathedral avenue northwest, told how he and his wife and daughter had studied but a month for their papers but advocated "every means of education available to learn about government" and the opportunities of a new land. They came here five years ago from Germany.

First Class Private Sam Callen, 35, of Russian descent, now serving his fifth hitch in the Army, summed it up this way: "This is a great thing. It's what they call a 'melting pot.' It shows you that you get along all right here if you don't interfere with others."

In answer to the words of a Flag Association speaker, "it is up to you to weave the pattern of the flag . . . what is and is to be," the new citizens raised their arms and pledged allegiance. They walked one by one to the dais and were presented diplomas and flags they waved above their heads as they sang to conclude the ceremony.

Mrs. H. C. White, Mrs. V. A. Clarke Lead in Bridge

Score 212 Match Points as District Tournament Opens

By Marian H. Barre

Post Bridge Editor

Mrs. V. A. Clarke and Mrs. H. C. White were leading a field of 29 pairs in the curtain raiser of the ninth annual tournament for the bridge championships of the District yesterday at the Shoreham Hotel. Besides the women's event, four other championships will be decided in the four-day period of play, ending Sunday night.

The leaders scored 212 match points for a board margin over Mrs. Charles Kavanaugh and Mrs. Wilfred St. Aubin, who finished second. Mrs. Irene Surguy and Mrs. Tom Hamlin were third, with 198½ points. The three leading pairs are Washington women. An intercity partnership of Mrs. N. T. N. Robinson, Washington, and Mrs. Allan Rutherford, Baltimore, ranked fourth, while Mrs. J. D. Wareing and Mrs. Harry Rankin, of Maplewood, N. J., led the visitors. The defending champion, Mrs. Alma Byrne and Mrs. Rose Robbins were nineteenth.

A McKenney-Baldwin movement was used in the game with the pairs meeting only half of the field in the first session. In the finals this afternoon, the movement will be completed. An odd number of pairs produced a "by-round," hence some pairs played 26 boards while others played 24.

Play for the mixed pair title began last evening with Mrs. Kavanaugh and John D. Mothershed defending the Capital Cup. 42 pairs being entered in the mixed event will be held tonight.

Finals in the intermediate championship will be played Saturday night with the last session of the open pair event.

The tournament is an American Contract Bridge League Master Point Championships, held under auspices of the Washington Bridge League.

Gary Cooper Heads Cast in Servcie Drama of Wild Days in Islands

"THE REAL GLORY." Samuel Goldwyn's picturization of a screen play by Jo Swerling and Robert R. Presnell, based on a novel by Charles L. Clifford, starring Gary Cooper, with Andrea Leeds, Reginald Owen, Broderick Crawford, Kay Johnson, Russell Hicks, Vladimir Sokoloff, Benny Inocencio, Ruby Robles, Tetsu Konai, Roy Gordon and Henry Kolker. Directed by Henry Hathaway. Previewed November 4. At Loew's Palace Theater.

BELL

There is a touch of authentic history as well as blood-chilling excitement in "The Real Glory," revealed to Washington audiences yesterday for the first time on a public screen at Loew's Palace Theater.

It is exceedingly evident, however, that the film story, ladled together by Jo Swerling and Robert R. Presnell out of the ingredients in Charles L. Clifford's novel, was designed primarily for thrilling entertainment rather than anything that might find its way into the history books and the classrooms of our steadier institutions of learning. The semi-official audience that attended last night's premiere, nevertheless, no doubt found much in the picture that reflected, at least to those who served in the Philippines during the period of the story, something of the experiences they themselves had encountered.

While there is a fragile thread of romantic interest running through the heroic tale, its major purpose is to demonstrate in what manner a courageous little American garrison converted the Philippine Constabulary, cowered by a tenacious and largely superstitious fear of the wily jungle Moros, into an efficient fighting unit capable of taking care of itself, the populace intrusted to its protection and, incidentally, the Moros. The prime mover in all this is a young lieutenant in the Medical Corps of the United States Army.

Performs Herculean Task

Dr. Caravan had quite a job on his hands. All he had to overcome was the personal terror of the ranking officer, left in charge after all of his superiors had been slaughtered, one at a time, by the bolo-swinging, but dissembling, savages; a cholera plague, the loss of practically all of the post's arms and ammunition and the inevitable annihilation of all the scouting parties that were sent out into the wilds. These harrowing handicaps all are depicted on the screen with unabashed realism and never softened by resort to mere suggestion or any nebulous symbolism. It gets pretty gory and grim at times. Gorilla warfare, in the Philippines or anywhere else, generally does.

The whole thing has been compounded along a course of cumulative suspense and mounting action. The final sequences mark the picture's climax with a burst of melodramatic action that is just about the last word in nerve-shattering conflict and personal bravery. If it doesn't send the cold shivers up and down your spine, it would be best to consult as skillful a physician as Dr. Caravan to find out what has happened to your nervous system.

The piece has been cast with Samuel Goldwyn's characteristic eye for the right man—and woman—in the right place. Gary Cooper, as Dr. Caravan, is a wizard of coolness, sagacity and medical eminence. He performs the clean-up job practically single-handed. His chief obstructionist is Capt. Hartley, going blind from an old bolo wound, and his chief aids Capt. Hartley's daughter, Linda; Lieut. McCool and Lieut. Larson, not forgetting the little native kid, Miguel. These important roles are judiciously assigned to Reginald Owen, Andrea Leeds, David Niven, Broderick Crawford and Master Benny Inocencio. Mr. Niven is the one who most seriously threatens Mr. Cooper's stardom. He is killed off just in time to prevent his stealing the picture. Miss Leeds is caught in a nasty predicament, but comes through nobly, even if this is not the sort of thing that brings out the best histrionism in her.

Brings out the best histrionism in her.

Brings Relax Tension

Contributory roles are effectively played by Kay Johnson and Russell Hicks, as unfortunate victims of the Moros' treachery; Tetsu Konai, as the jungle chieftain, and Vladimir Sokoloff, as the Datu, craftiest renegade of them all. Many subordinate players add to the realism of a play that has been given the genuine tang of the Tropics and all of the exotic qualities of its actual locale.

"One Mother's Family," a cartoon comedy, concerned with an old hen's perplexities; a Paramount "Popular Science" reel that is packed with interesting novelties, and a "News of the Day" are the supplementary attractions that serve to relax the tension of the Palace's highly explosive major feature.

Heroine of the Moro Uprising

one of the more reliable of the cinema's younger actresses, who appears in the principal feminine role in Samuel Goldwyn's production of "The Real Glory," which yesterday opened its first Washington engagement on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater. Gary Cooper is star of the picture, which includes David Niven and Reginald Owen in its excellent cast

Taylor-Garson-Ayres Combination Clicks In Marital Mixup; Wally Vernon Hits

"REMEMBER?" Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of a screen play by Corey Ford and Norman Z. McLeod, costarring Robert Taylor, Greer Garson and Lew Ayres with Billie Burke, Reginald Owen, George Barbier, Henry Travers, Richard Carle, Paul Hurst, Laura Hope Crews and Sara Haden. Directed by Norman Z. McLeod. Previewed November 7. At Loew's Capitol Theater

Take a screwy young advertising executive, a preoccupied young patent medicine chemist, whose firm is Jeff Holland's chief client; a flittery society girl, to whom Sky Ames has become engaged during a Bermuda vacation; two slightly goofy parents of the girl, the executives of the big business enterprises, a saturnine traffic cop and a patient judge, mix them all together with a harmless brand of insanity, and what have you got—"Remember?"

Anyhow, as I have said before, you will remember "Remember?" after you have seen it on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater, where it opened yesterday. Even if you don't remember "Remember?," you will remember the fun you had watching it unfold its lunatic revelations upon the screen.

There is no point in attempting to recapitulate the "plot" of this sort of giddy charade. It is as light as feathers and as breezy as yesterday. But at bottom it has a clever idea which, for once, makes repetitious action an asset instead of a liability. You see the story virtually twice before it finally fades out on a tag-line that must have startled the Will Hays office out of a year's growth until they sat down and figured out how innocuous it was, after all. The title of the comedy is particularly pat, because it relates to precisely what the major characters in the frolic do not do—all based on a remarkable potion that causes memory to lapse while all of the other faculties remain intact. A marriage and a divorce are dangerous things not to remember—but you will see for yourself.

A New Greer Garson

At any rate, "Remember?" affords Robert Tayor the best vehicle he has had recently, discloses Greer Garson, the Kathie of "Goodbye, Mr. Chips," as a comedienne of the first water and provides Lew Ayres with another opportunity to be a frustrated young man, much as he was in "Holiday." Furthermore, it enables Billie Burke to be another fluttery wife and mother, as she was in "Merrily We Live," and furnishes Reginald Owen a fine comic opportunity, as Miss Burke's overstuffed husband. Henry Travers is the kindly judge, who marries the same couple until he gets a bit tired of the whole thing and Paul Hurst is cast as the cop who manages to be on hand every time Mr. Taylor and Miss Garson go a little battier than usual.

There is something of the flavor of "Design for Living"—and two or three other hilarious hits—in the gay goings-on and the entire fol-de-rol has been staged within an inch of your life. Mental abberation has been elevated to an extremely high plane in this one.

An abbreviated feature of unusual importance also is presented on the new bill at the Capitol in "Drunken Driving." It is a grim and thoroughly terrifying exposition of what happens when alcohol takes the wheel of a motor car and has been awarded special recognition by those concerned with the sizeable task of removing hazard from the highways. Everybody ought to see "Drunken Driving"—not as entertainment, but as enlightenment on a vital subject.

Wally Vernon a Hit

The stage bill at the Capitol this week is notable for the topline presence of another Hollywood comedian who comes to town with an act. Wally Vernon is a dancing comic, on the lackadaisical side, who scores tremendously. A gentleman introduced as his father lends valuable aid, but it is Wally who really goes to town and panics the pewholders.

The Rhythm Rockets open the proceedings with a precision number that leads up to Bud Hughes, with a bag of magician's tricks and two unusually well trained dogs. The Ahernes come next with a potpourri of rope-swinging, singing, dancing and clowning, with the emphasis on the rope-swinging and acrobatic dancing. Joan Merrill sings a group of torch songs in Grade-A fashion and the Cole Dancers fill in all the chinks not occupied by the Rockets.

The Fox Movietone News completes a bill which, except for "Drunken Driving" is luxuriously stuffed with eiderdown of the finest obtainable quality.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Nov. 9.

I don't know which to shout about—the packed, enthusiastic house which greeted "Rigoletto" and Larry Tibbett, who never sang better, nor did Lily Pons after the first act. And Sandra Gahl's putting sex into opera. Or her husband, Mitch Leisen's party for opera stars and our Hollywood gang afterwards. That was really something—"the best show Paramount's had this year." Tented in the garden, smilax trailed from San Francisco, white chrysanthemums by the hundreds, white-capped chefs by the dozen looking like the Winter Palace in Moscow during the Czar's regime. And Spencer Tracy with a white patch over his eye. He'd had a cyst removed and they took six stitches. He looked at Ray Noble's soloist and there was an identical patch over his eye. Spence said: "This convinces me I must go to more parties. What hospitality."

HOPPER

Bob Taylor and Barbara Stanwyck postponed their flight to New York and came in traveling clothes. Those swell dancers, Mary Parker and Billy Daniels, put on their show to thunderous applause. And Jean Feldman's 5-inch solid diamond bow-knot put everyone's eye out. And when I said: "Good, eh?" Jean replied: "You've got to be good to get one like this."

The Bob Millers (he's president of the San Francisco Opera Company, you know) said they had no idea Hollywood was so chummy—why, it was just like home. But the sweetest incident was when Laura Hope Crews gave Sandra Gahl Leisen a ring Geraldine Farrar had given her the night she opened in "The Silver Cord." That's giving—for a bit of her heart went with it.

Bill Powell tells me he's looking over new scripts now that he's finished "Another Thin Man." "I'm not a man of leisure, and pray heaven I never will be," he says. "It's fun visiting Myrna Loy, Clark Gable and others of my friends who love ranching, but the only livestock I'd have is a dog. Horses scare me, I can't milk a cow and chickens seem out of place anywhere except on a platter surrounded by hot biscuits and honey." (Oh, honey you make my mouth water.) "It amazes me," he said, "to see Myrna picking limes from a tree—I lift mine from a bag. A swimming pool and badminton court are my limit! Guess I'm just a city slicker at heart; and I mean to stay that way!" That's good enough for us, Bill . . .

"Greater love hath no man" than Producer Sam Katz, since he's taken up early morning riding to be near Ilona Massey. He's never been on a horse before in his life. They tell me Nelson Eddy for the first time looks and acts like a real lover when the plays opposite Massey. I can hardly wait! And after hearing him sing the "Balalaika" song I can believe it! Before Tony Martin leaves tomorrow he's sending a little note ot all his friends, saying: "Please tell anyone who might be interested, that Alice and I are very much in love. I'm leaving for another p. a. in less than a year at Paramount, November 28, and because my air show emanates from there." It's news, too, that instead of singing three songs in "Passport to Happiness," he's doing six. Some day a producer will realize what they've got in Tony . . . I hear it's Belmont, the banker, who's never had anything to do with picture people, who wants to buy Columbia from Frank Capra . . .

For the first time, Hollywood stole a march on Broadway, when Frank Capra bought "The Life and Death of John Doe" from Bob Presnall and Richard Connell. They were writing it as a play and had finished the second act, when Frank read and grabbed it. The premise of the story is: Blessed are the meek—for they shall inherit the earth! How soon, oh, Lord?

Deanna Still Pursues First Love

Exactly what one has become accustomed to expect in a Deanna Durbin film is on view at RKO-Keith's Theater, where "First Love," the young star's newest film, has entered its second week.

Charming, naive and infectious is the mood of "First Love," with the lilting soprano of the star coming off the sound track more cleanly than ever. Her chief songs are a Strauss waltz, "Home, Sweet Home," and "One Fine Day," from "Madame Butterfly," an aria which the films have viewed as their very own ever since Grace Moore popularized it in her "One Night of Love."

The story is a gentle, unassuming romance, a modern "Cinderella," in which the poor relation loses her slipper at the ball to which she was not asked. Like the earlier Cinderella, her slipper is returned by her chosen prince charming, who carries her off "and," as the picture puts it, "they lived happily ever after."

Her relatives beautifully parallel the worldly relations of the fairy tale. The uncle is rich and busy, the aunt is immersed in a hazy form of astrology and her two cousins who go to the ball are selfish and worthless. But the servants of the mansion see to it that their charge goes off to the ball as the other Cinderella did: drawn by twelve white horses, the "horses" they supply being a friendly police escort.

We are glad to add that the production is not so lavish as some of the ones with which the dimpled singer has been surrounded. Her looked-forward-too-party does occur in a sumptuous habitat, but since that palatial home represents the castle of the fairy story, there is reason for its lavishness.

The supporting players are top-notch. Helen Garrish is fine as the jealous cousin, and Eugene Pallette lends his heavy dignity to the role of the uncle. Leatrice Joy reappears to win recognition for her playing of the aunt, and Robert Stack makes his screen debut as Deanna's beau ideal, Kathleen Howard, remembered from her days as a Metropolitan Opera contralto, plays the understanding school teacher to whom Deanna turns, and Jack Mulhall is the family chauffer.

Also on the Keith screen is the latest "March of Time," "Uncle Sam—the Farmer," and the second edition of "Information Please." Need more be said to recommend the bill?

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Nov. 9.

AWARD: The report from London is that Robert B. Q. Henriques, 34 years old, has been notified that he won the $15,000 All-Nations Prize Novel Contest . . . The story will break shortly . . . The novel is called "No Arms, No Armour" . . . The novel is very much pacifist in tone . . . But after Henriques had written it, war was declared—and he's now a major in the British Army."

RETURN: Mrs. Dora Delano Forbes, the venerable aunt of President Roosevelt, who has been living in Paris these many years, has refused as yet to heed the plea of Ambassador Bullitt that all Americans return to this country immediately . . . Mrs. Forbes, however, is planning to come back . . . "But I'm waiting," she explains, "until I can get accommodations which are comfortable."

LUCK: The $1,000 Pot o' Gold radio program now offers a $2,800 prize to the fortunate person who is at home during the broadcast of that program and who accepts telephonic notification of the award. . . . Last Tuesday the prize had reached the sum of $1,900, but because the station couldn't reach the lucky person the $100 consolation prize was sent to him and the $900 balance was added to the Pot o' Gold. . . . As a matter of fact, the "lucky person" really was home. When the long-distance operator called his house in Los Angeles and said: "Long distance: Philadelphia calling," he refused to accept the call, yelled at the operator: Thell with these Halloween tricks!"—and hung up.

SIN: Sunday night Roark Bradford, author of the new Paul Robeson play, "John Henry," accompanied the director, Anthony Brown, on a tour of the New York night spots . . . The clubs were empty that night. After a 3 a. m. tour of West Fifty-second street Brown took Bradford home and asked him: "Well, what does my New Orleans friend think of New York now?" . . . Bradford sighed: "Sin in New York is jest kinda sleepy."

ART: Max Reinhardt has received word from Salzburg that the place he had hoped would become the center of art and music now is a military encampment . . . What grieves Reinhardt most is the fact that the castle he owned until Germany absorbed Austria was the place last summer where the Nazi and Soviet officials met to confer about the details of the pact which left Germany free to risk war.

NOISE: Rosa Ponselle, the opera singer, is disturbed by the slightest sound . . . She was in Seattle recently completing a cross-country tour. Although the hotel management there gave her the best suite, Miss Ponselle complained that the regular beating of gongs in the street prevented her from sleeping. She therefore addressed a note to the Mayor asking him to eliminate the gongs, as a favor not only to her but to her father-in-law, the Mayor of Baltimore. "Sorry we can't oblige," the mayor explained. "Those gongs are the stop-go signals of our traffic system."

CHATTER: Gov. Lehman will appoint an upstate judge to fill the vacancy on the Court of Appeals bench. For the first time in many years Brooklyn won't be represented there . . . Fritz Mandl, first husband of Hedy Lamarr, is in New York now, and toured the night clubs yesterday . . . Ed Wynn has a new radio program.

CRIME: The United States Attorney's office is hopeful that Earl Browder will plead guilty to his indictment resulting from the use of forged passports . . . Browder has admitted in public speeches that he traveled to Europe on a forged passport. But what is worrying the United States Attorney's office is the fact that they haven't been able to locate the person whose name had been forged.

COMPROMISE: Practitioners who specialize in cases before the National Labor Relations Board at first were puzzled as to why Board Member Leiserson always seeks compromise and settlement, while Board Member Smith appears to be rigid in demanding enforcement. . . . The personal backgrounds of these two helped solve the question. . . . The arbitrary Smith has one child. Leiserson, however, can rule his family only by compromise—because he has seven children.

ROYALTY: J. P. Morgan is exhibiting to his friends a copy of the Coronation program he received from King George VI. The program is autographed by both George and Elizabeth . . . "This is very rare, isn't it?" Morgan was asked . . . "I guess so," Morgan replied, "but this is really valuable," and he brought forth the wrapping paper in which the program had been mailed. It indicates that the King had attended to the mailing himself—Morgan's name and address both are in the King's handwriting.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Nov. 9 (INS).—I certainly want to see "The Great Commandment," which Darryl Zanuck bought on the hoof, speaking figuratively. Financed by the Rev. James Friedrich, an Episcopal minister, and produced by Cathedral Pictures, it has a Biblical theme based on the commandment, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and deals with Jesus bringing peace during the Jewish revolt against the Romans in 30 A. D. After seeing what Irving Pichel, the director, had done with a limited amount of money, Darryl not only bought it for Twentieth Century-Fox release but signed Pichel as well.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Although nothing has been said, I understand that Zanuck will make extensive additions, using the scenes already filmed as a basis. Certainly there is no better time than right now to issue a little religious propaganda, for there is too much hatred in the world today.

When I saw Tom Mix on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot in his fancy white car with red leather upholstery, arrayed in his famous 10-gallon hat, I had a sneaking hunch he wasn't there just to say "hello." Sure enough, Tom had been in a huddle with the Twentieth Century executives about appearing in "End of the Trail," the picture which will glorify the old-time Western stars just as "Hollywood Cavalcade" did the custard pie comedians. His role won't be big enough to earn the $20,000 weekly he used to draw down as a Fox star, but Tom is still mighty popular. In this day of efficiency experts, with all the studios saving clips and old twine, such a figure doesn't seem possible, does it?

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Lew Ayres is expected to ask for his legal papers from Ginger Rogers now that Helen Gilbert is free. She is his real heart and you wouldn't have doubted it if you had seen them together; Dolores Del Rio and Orson Welles looking at "The End of the Day" at the Esquire; Dorothy Lamour and Robert Preston, who apparently had a misunderstanding, getting together at the Frank Borzage cocktail party; it's time for Marie Wilson to come home. Nick Grinde glimpsed with Barbara Pepper at the night spots; Wayne Morris' contract has been renewed at Warner's and he and Bubbles couldn't be happier; little Suzanne, Danny Danker's baby, who has been very sick at the Cedars of Lebanon, was well enough to go home today.

Gregory Ratoff welcomes Eugenie Leontovitch, his wife, home after a long absence. He'll entertain for her Friday night after the preview of "Daytime Wife;" Miriam Hopkins has been out of "Virginia City" for a few days with a bad sore throat.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

Lonely After Breaking Off Protracted Love Affair, Man Asks How to Broaden Social Horizon

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a young man 30 years of age, who is fed up with the daily routine and who is looking around for some new interest. First of all, let me say that I have just concluded a love affair that extended over a considerable period of time. This, of course, has left me rather depressed and I feel the need of making new friends, especially of the opposite sex.

I work hard during the day, with a private concern, and go to school nights, so that I have plenty to do, but the monotony of this sort of existence just about gets me at times. Just how can one go abou meeting desirable young people and enjoying a more extended social life? I shall appreciate an early reply. PUZZLED.

DEAR PUZZLED: Since you work by day, go to school of nights and must of necessity devote some time to "home work," to keep abreast of your studies, it appears to me that you lack the leisure so essential to enlarging one's circle of acquaintances and developing a variety of recreational pursuits. There is some question, also, as to whether you have the financial means to cut your social life to a larger pattern.

Perhaps you have heard the old saying, "One thing at a time, and that done well, is a very good rule, as many can tell." In my opinion, probably the wisest course you could pursue would be to stiffen your upper lip, make a philosophical adjustment to your current loneliness of spirit, and finish your night school education before undertaking to cultivate a new assortment of acquaintances.

In the meantime, are you sure that you aren't overlooking worthwhile friendship material both in your office and night school environment? Such associations, it seems to me, should provide a continuous supply of amiable companionship, for luncheon, dinner, the movies, weekend bouts at golf, tennis, riding, or whatever recreations you are accustomed to choosing.

I wonder if your principal mistake in the past—and a mistake which you may incline to repeat in future—hasn't had to do with expecting one luckless girl to serve you in the capacity of leaning post and social cicerone? It would seem so, to judge from your present desolation at having broken off a protracted "love affair." Such a supposed solution of one's need for social life is more harmful than helpful, obviously, to both parties involved.

Learn to stand on your own feet; to be the axis of your own social life; to take people as they come, without expecting too much from, or investing too much in, another personality—unless and until you are ready to identify yourself completely and permanently with your "better half" or "other self" in marriage.

How Contact Author Of Inspiring Book?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: This summer you mentioned a book called, "It Shall Be Done Unto You," by Lucius Humphrey. It is now my bible, for I read it daily and it has been a great help to me. I wonder if you would tell me, through your column, what other books he has written and whether (and how) I might get in touch with him, in case he ever talks personally with people. I still need help and I believe that he could guide me. I have found his book to be of immeasurable uplift to one who needed to hear what he has to say.

CONSTANT READER.

Authors Are Reached Through Publishers

DEAR C. R.: Off-hand, I can't say whether Mr. Humphrey has written other books, although if he has, the list will, in all probability, be found on one of the fly leaves of the book you have. As for how to get in touch with him, write him in care of his publisher (whose name will be found on the title page of the book you have). It is a general practice for an author's "public" to communicate with him in this fashion. It is my understanding that Mr. Humphrey has (in the past, at least), seen persons by appointment to discuss their problems with them. As an alternative to addressing yourself to the author, you might put your questions direct to the publisher. Your request for information will not be ignored.

M. H.

'Want of Decency Is Want of Sense'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: In my 35 years of writing for local and other newspapers and magazines, no one except "Another Man Reader" (writing in your column of November 7), ever intimated that mine is "the viewpoint of a hypocrite." If I had made such an unfounded allegation against a person of whom I knew absolutely nothing, I would feel that I was more in need of the services of an evangelist than equipped to dispense them . . .

I shall never forget a speech I heard before a Y. M. C. A. meeting years ago, in which the speaker said, "There is a best way to live and it is the best way to live." . . . Benjamin Franklin said, "Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other, and scarce in that." And I think that these words of Alexander Pope are worth remembering: "Immodest words admit of no defense, for want of decency is want of sense. H. B. B.

Basic Outfit for Career Girls

Posed against the background of Denys Pueck's noted marble "La Sirene" in the promenade of the Mayflower Hotel is a contemporary siren, Elizabeth Baldwin, who finds time to be a busy office toiler as well. She is typical of hundreds of private secretaries in Washington who realize that great attention should be paid to that essential everyday costume which will gracefully carry over from business to luncheons or dinners in town. The wool wardrobe suit Elizabeth wears is a one-color triumph, a subtle smoky opal blue being used for the simply detailed crepey wool dress and for the well cut reefer of sterner and warmer stuff

Vitamin Concentrates Should Supplement Food and Not Be Used in Place of It; Menus Should Supply Protective Elements

THE STORY of the vitamins, which has been running from day to day this week, would be incomplete without some reference to the concentrates. These are made by pharmaceutical firms and dispensed through the drug stores and even over the cosmetic counters of department stores.

Doctors and nutritionists alike stress the advisability of securing your vitamins in the form of food. Valuable as they are, the concentrates should not be considered as anything more than dietary supplements.

It seems to be a human failing to act on the assumption that if a little is good, more is better . . . but it is very easy to take too many of the concentrates and upset the digestive tract. Many persons cannot handle ther in the amounts suggested for the average and rather than specify an amount, some firms prefer to have the doctor prescribe for the individual.

Don't Neglect F- t

If you were under the impression that you could rely entirely upon the concentrates, you might be tempted to leave the protective foods out of the menus. That would be extremely unwise. There are probably many essential elements in the vitamin-supplying foods which have not been incorporated in the concentrates. In all cases the menus should be balanced to include the protective foods, the concentrate: used as supplements.

By careful planning, the low calorie menus can be made to furnish the vitamins and minerals in adequate amounts. But there is some doubt that a diet restricted to 1,000 calories can supply the protective elements in optimal amounts. And since optimal amounts are needed for exuberant health, the concentrates might well be used in conjunction with the prolonged low calorie diet.

Reducers generally are more content to remain on their diets, have more pep, and feel less hungry for the use of one vitamin A, B, D, capsule daily.

Exercise Necessary

But any reducer who takes less than 1,000 calories per day and who relies on the vitamin and mineral concentrates to make up the deficit in the protective foods should be under the supervision of a doctor. On so restricted a diet you reduce at a speed that may be dangerous to your health and calamitous to your appearance.

Another supplementary measure the reducer cannot afford to overlook is exercise. Without it, you cannot hope to do a beautiful job of slimming. Don't miss tomorrow's article on exercise.

Canned Milk Facial

Hollywood, Calif. — Priscilla Lane, movie actress, credits her peaches-and-cream complexion to a daily facial with canned milk. After a soap-and-water cleansing, Priscilla rubs the milk well into her skin. She says it is the only lubricating treatment she needs to keep her complexion soft, white and in perfect condition

The season approaches, sad to say,
(I'd halt it if I could),
When all Democrats and Republicans
Must be prefixed with "good."

Today's Social Notes

From the Truthtown Torch

General dissatisfaction with the refreshments was voiced by feminine guests who attend the large tea given yesterday afternon by Mrs. Wynkoop Bigger. Telephones were kept ringing until a late hour last night discussing the canapes which, according to the guests, were not even spread with caviar or anchovies, but only with cream cheese and "grocery store" mixtures.

It was also reported that the pocket biscuits containing the little pig sausages were not served hot and were unbuttered and that the shrimps were marinated in an insipid sauce.

Some of the guests were particularly indignant because they said they found only prunes inside the bacon balls which were passed on toothpicks. It was also reported that the iced roses on the cookies were too hard to bite into.

The Glamour Set

Members of the younger crowd turned out en masse for the cocktail party given by Miss Joan (Cookie) Pace in honor of her house guest, Miss Gloria (Ginger) Bigsbee. Miss Bigsbee, a stunning blonde with a bob reaching to her shoulders, a throaty voice and a languorous manner, wore a long close-fittting black dress and a large silver necklace. Miss Pace also wore her long yellow hair to her shoulders and a close-fitting black dress and a large gold necklace.

Assisting were Miss Anne (Cutie) Burlap, a petite blonde with a shoulder length bob, a deep voice and a slightly fatigued manner ,and Miss Barbara (Bimi) Packammer, a tallish blonde with a shoulder length bob and a far-away stare. Miss Burlap and Miss Packhammer wore long close fitting black dresses and large necklaces.

Among those who dropped in were Miss Margi- (Mitzi) Steppit, hatless, with a blonde shoulder bob and silver fox coat to her knees, Miss Dorothy (Dizzy) Tooner, also hatless, in a long blonde bob, a knee-length fox coat, and a vivid splash of lipstick; Miss Louise (Looney) Wadd, of the long gold tresses, deep drawl and dreamy manner; Miss Adele (Ducky) Flitter, a heavenly vision in a long honey colored bob, a pale face, a black dress, a knee-length fur coat and a superior manner, and scores of others all hatless and fur-coated with long blonde bobs, black dresses, fur coats, large necklaces, bonfire nail polish and world-weary manners.

The Villain in the Plot

"Don't you think Sadie Crash is an awful pusher?"

"Of course. That's her inferiority complex."

"And yet Percy is so backward."

"Oh, Percy has a terrible sense of inferiority."

"They say Sadie's daughter is a regular whiz in school."

"I'm not surprised. She's compensating. You see the whole thing is she feels inferior."

'And yet the son fails in everything."

"Oh well, that's because he has no confidence in himself—you know feels inferior."

"I heard George Crash had started drinking again."

"I'm not surprised. He's always been trying to escape his sense of inferiority."

"And they say Marie is going to Reno because of it."

"That's not why she's going."

"Why?"

'She wants to prove she can get another man."

"No!"

"Yes. You know she has that terrible inferiority complex . . ."

Hot Sulphur Bath Regime Helps Chase Colds, Aids Beauty

By Marshall Adams,

The Post Fashion Editor.

AT LAST we have discovered a sure and pleasant method of routing that old November bugaboo—the common cold. It comes via the hot sulphur springs which are found right here in Washington—transplanted from the spas of America's South and Middle West.

A physician and his wife of this city have been rejuvenating tired business people and victims of winter colds for almost four years.

It wasn't until a few days ago, however, we had the opportunity of playing guinea pig to discover whether that foggy feeling that collects around this time of year could really be coped with—so here is the step by step experience of taking a hot sulphur bath right "in your own back yard."

The first procedure is an examination by the physician, an ethical D. C. who will not take patients unless they really need medical attention or a toning up. If decidedly on the obese side, your routine is accelerated and you are given a special low calorie diet and exercise suggestions without charge.

Step two is to strip, recline in a relaxed position in a cabinet that clamps down on everything but the head which rests comfortably "out of doors" on a pillow. This permits plenty of fresh air and if a cold has you by the throat, you breathe deeply into a towel, pungent with pine or eucalyptis balm. The cabinet is unlike the regular steam Turkish or Russian cabinets in that the heat is under control at all times to transmit the pore-cleansing, poison-routing sulphur vapor. The secret of the efficiency of this sulphuric vapor is that it is nature's own charging which penetrates the run-down system far better than just plain water steam can do.

The third step is to completely relax for a half hour with no fear of a weakening after affect for there is no excessive heat or cold in the protective arms of this cabinet. When you have been thoroughly cleaned of skin and body toxins, you are scrubbed with a fiber grass hand mit and pure palm oil, then rinsed.

The final steps are performed by the physician for the men and by his wife for tired career women. You relax while they massage muscles with a sweet solution that is scented with wintergreen. Finally the hand vibrator is used from your toes to your neck to stimulate your blood circuit. Overweight worriers can give thanks as the vibrator glides over bumpy spots that soon may become enticing curves. Anemics with a hint of flu can be grateful for this painless, inexpensive way of combating winter ailments.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York Designers Are Captivated by Only Rival in Shanghai, China

New York, Nov. 9.

WE'VE welcomed every known brand of clothes designer in this town, goodness knows. And now we are entertaining and admiring the only creative girl in this field who operates in the great and bedeviled City Shanghai, China. She's as pretty, cute and chic a creature as you could find, and she's here introducing some of her little numbers for the benefit of her sad country's war refugees.

Alice Hughes

She's a bit of a thing, with those black and snappy Chinese eyes, and her regular name is Tsang Esing-ying, but called Helen by her American friends, just to save time and tonsil-strain. She's had a lot of distinguished clients at home, including Le Ya-ching, China's ace woman flier, and Hollywood's Anna May Wong, who was born in Los Angeles and only visited China for the first time a few years back.

As for her work, Helen naturally does a lot of modern things with ancient Chinese embroidery, often designing an entire gown about a bit of that precious stuff. She has eve used old Chinese trunk locks as coat-ornaments, she tells me, and the stunt became quite a vogue in Shanghai. Her first local showing was held last night, and included old Chinese costumes as well as her moderns.

As a person, this Tsang minx is also something. Her father was a provincial governor, but Helen came under the influence of the great Republican revolutionary, Sun Yat Sen, and decided to be a useful worker and not just a parlor ornament. She studied art here, and went to our Horace Mann School. She was Shanghai's first advertising artist, and from this went into her present fashion career.

A great girl from any angle, this lovely and clever little Oriental tid-bit. If she comes your way, don't dare to give her a miss. You'd just be cheating yourselves.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I met beautiful Margot Grahame (remember her in "The Informer" at my pet milliner's the other day. Her hair has gone from blond to red, and she is now married to Allan McMartin, of the rich Canadian family, and she's going to be in a Broadway show this winter—her first. White face, red hair and green hat brightened up even a dull, rainy day. Margot, a very talented trouper, never got far in Hollywood. I never thought she tried very hard at it . . .

Margot Grahame, Movie Actress, Slated For Stage Show

Lots of people say our Mayor LaGuardia can get anything at all. Now he's proved it. Worried about the low state of the town's upstate reservoirs, he told reporters "Unless God is good and rain sets in before snow time, we'll be in a serious predicament." Sequel—two days later it rained for 48 hours, and 1.6 inches of water showered down. How's that for our little mayor? . . .

I'M trying to get hapless helpmate Hall to wear a new fibreglass necktie, actually made of glass threads, very pretty, and washes like a linen hankie. Curtains and lampshades are also made of it. Hall bucks at this particular tie to date, claiming the pattern is too light and snappy for an old gent, the poor creature.

Contestants Suggest Five Delicious Nut Novelties

Cashews Play a Role In Sour Milk Waffles

Pecan Pumpkin Ice Cream Recipe Is Timely Winner; Blanched Almonds Have Major Part in Cream Soup With Chopped Onions

By The Post Food Editor

THE HAMMER AND ANVIL will soon be clanging aplenty cracking nuts to make the delicious novelties suggested in this week's Post recipe contest. Dishes from the soup course through the main course, to salad and dessert were suggested. The recipe contestants realize that nuts are a concentrated food and are better used as a part of the meal than as an additional tidbit to follow the coffee. The winning recipes this week use nuts in unusual combinations, as shown by the following winning recipes:

Tropical Splendor

That tropical nut, the cashew, from India and Latin America, has skyrocketed almost overnight into fourth place in America's nut eating. One reason it might have jumped to such a favored place is the use of it in Sour Milk Waffles, as they are made by Mrs. Pauline Crow, 1910 T street southeast, to win the first award in this week's recipe contest. Her recipe follows:

Mrs. Crow

Cashew Sour Milk Waffles

Sift 2 cups cake flour, measure, add 1½ teaspoons baking powder, ¼ teaspoon each of soda and salt and 1 tablespoon sugar. Sift all again. Add ¼ cup chopped cashews and mix well. Combine 2 well-beaten egg yolks with 1¼ cups sour milk or buttermilk and 4 tablespoons melted butter. Add to flour mixture, beating until smooth. Fold in 2 stiffy beaten egg whites. Bake in a hot waffle iron. Serve with butter and maple syrup. Makes 4 or 5 four-section waffles.

Harvest Special

Pecan meats are a leader in the nut clan for using in cookery. Mrs. Mary Doyle, 2100 Massachusetts avenue northwest, wins with a very seasonable recipe for Pecan Pumpkin Ice Cream. The deliciousness of the product and the ease of preparation gives Mrs. Doyle the second prize of $2. Her recipe follows:

Mrs. Doyle

Pecan Pumpkin Ice Cream

Heat 1½ cups canned or fresh pumpkin with 1½ cups milk, ¼ teaspoon cloves, 1½ teaspoons cinnamon, 1½ cups brown sugar, packed firmly, ¾ teaspoon ginger and ½ teaspoon salt. Pour over 2 eggs slightly beaten and cook in double boiler until thickened. Strain, cool and add 1½ cups thin cream, ½ teaspoon orange extract and 1 cup pecan meats. If freezer is used, pack, using 8 parts chopped ice to 1 part rock salt, or freeze in electrical refrigerator.

Soup 'n' Nuts

The range of soups is endless, for everything goes into the soup pot. Mary Lou Cameron, 2101 Sixteenth street northwest, wins a $1 award with a Cream of Almond Soup, which is as delicious as it is highly nutritious. This makes an excellent luncheon dish. The recipe for Miss Cameron's winning dish follows:

Miss Cameron

Cream of Almond Soup

Chop 1 cup blanched almonds very fine. Fry 2 tablespoons chopped onion, with the almonds, in 4 tablespoons butter until brown, stirring frequently. Place over hot water, add 4 tablespoons flour and mix well. Add 3 cups milk and 1 cup cream gradually and cook, stirring constantly until thickened. Season with 1½ teaspoons salt and pepper. Garnish each portion when served with finely chopped roasted almonds. Serves 6.

A Pecan Caper

A dessert that deserves a crown of laurel is pecan pie. Ruth Fullmer, 2219 Minnesota avenue, wins a $1 award with her recipe for making Southern Pecan Tarts. This pie is a general favorite and the following recipe of Miss Fullmer's is one you will want for your recipe box:

Miss Fullmer

Southern Pecan Tarts

Combine 1¼ cups sugar, ½ cup corn syrup and ¾ cup butter and bring to a boil. Beat 3 eggs and 1 cup pecan meats. Add the hot syrup gradually. Cool. Pour the cooled filling into unbaked tart shells and bake in a moderately hot oven, 375 degrees for 30 minutes. Makes filling for 12 tarts or 1 9-inch pie.

Oven Sweetmeat

Baked Fudge is an innovation and Mrs. C. Crampton Hoskinson, 4509 Lowell street northwest, will let you decide for yourself if you want to call it candy or cake. For this recipe Mrs. Hoskinson wins a $1 award, and her directions for making it are as follows:

Mrs. Hoskinson

Baked Fudge

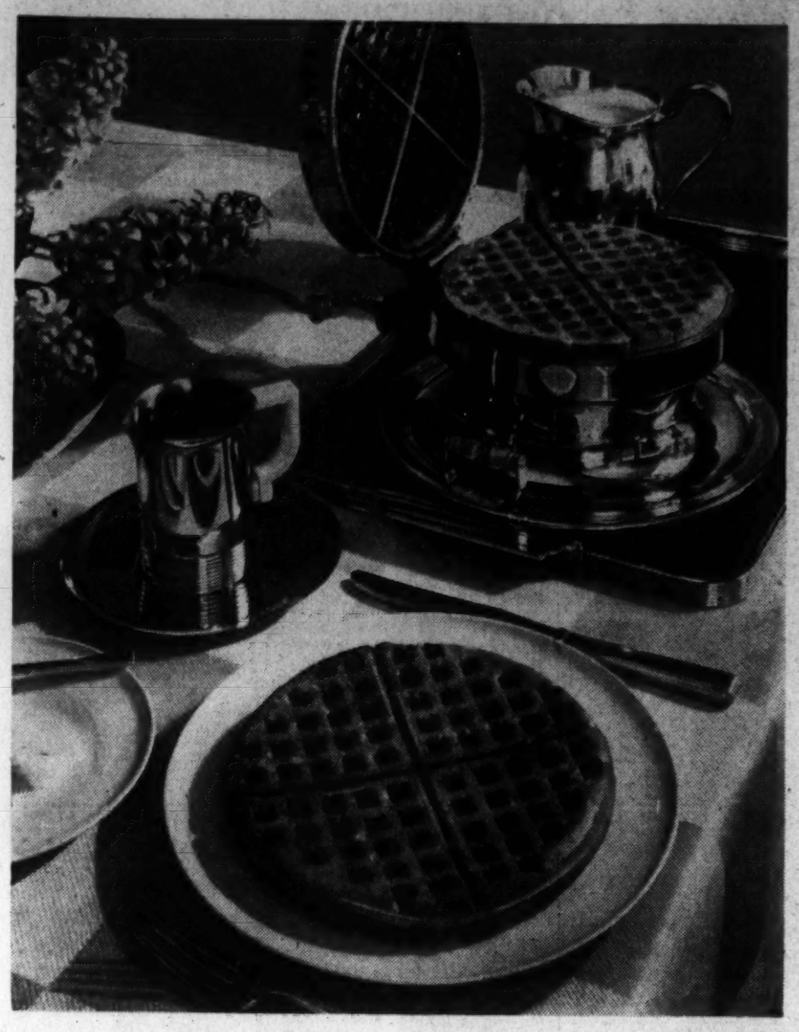
Cut 2 ounces of chocolate into pieces and put it with ¼ cup milk into a sauce pan. Stir and cook over a low flame until smooth, thick paste is formed. Beat 2 eggs and add 1 cup sugar. Stir until it is dissolved in the eggs. Cool the chocolate paste, then add it to the egg and sugar mixture. Measure flour after sifting to obtain ½ cup. Add ½ teaspoon salt and sift again into the above mixture. Add 1 teaspoon vanilla, 1 cup nut meats. Stir well. Melt 1-3 cup butter and add to the other ingredients. Beat well and turn into a greased pan, 9 by 9 inches. Bake at 350 degrees for 40 to 45 minutes. Cool and cut into squares. Yield, 16 squares.

Hot Mustard Sauce

This new mustard sauce does wonders for hot, well-seasoned cauliflower, spinach or broccoli: mix a tablespoon of prepared mustard with ½ cup stiff mayonnaise, add a dash of salt, paprika and celery salt and 1 teaspoon of lemon juice. Serve with 3 cups of cooked vegetable.

Spicy Idea

Spiced pineapple rings give a delicious garnish for boiled or fried ham. For quick spicing method, simmer 15 minutes, 1/3 cup red cinnamon candies with 1½ cups juice, ½ cup brown sugar and 6 slices of pineapple. Stir several times. Pour onto a shallow dish and when chilled the slices will be jellied on top.



A Sunday morning breakfast such as the one pictured above will surely find all-hands-on-deck. Crisp sour milk waffles made by Mrs. Crow's winning recipe, using the attractive waffle service together with a background of bright flowers, will bring a glow of cheerfulness to the meal

Sweet Rolls Are Feature Of Olney Inn Cookery

Pumpkin Pie With Nut and Honey Topping And Orange Sauce for Duck Are Given as Suggestions for Thanksgiving Dinner

Distinctive recipes of eating places about Washington are given weekly in this column.

By Martha Ellyn.
The Post Food Editor.

"MANLY DEEDS and womanly words" is the motto of the State of Maryland. This motto should be extended to include "delicious foods" for which the State is also famous. Atop a tree-crested hill of Montgomery County, Md., in the heart of a lovely old neighborhood of Friends, is located Olney Inn, famous for its appetizing food.

Martha Ellyn

Olney Inn was not a deliberate choice, for Clara May Downey, the owner and manager, driving along the Old Baltimore pike one autumn day had a blowout in front of a driveway leading to an old farmhouse. That was her first glimpse of the funny little house she has built into the present Olney Inn. When the inn was opened it had three homemade tables, furnishings from the 10-cent store and three girl employes. Now there are many tables, beautiful furnishings and more than 50 girls to help.

"Chef" at Olney Inn is an old Tennessee Negro who cooks out of his head instead of from a cook book. But to preserve the recipes Mrs. Downey's secretaries chase about the kitchen taking down the recipes as "Chef" sings them out as he cooks.

Off of the homey entrance hall where guests gather before mealtime is the famous Maryland Room. Here are the famed Hauenstein murals depicting the historic Landing in Maryland, the Burning of the Peggy Stewart—which prompted James Ryder Randall to write "Maryland, My Maryland;" Washington on his way to Yorktown, the First American Steamboat and Steam Railroad, and other famous happenings.

Plays, poems and songs have been written about Maryland and there is always praise, too, for the excellent food served at Olney Inn. While each and every dish is the "best" yet, it seems that everyone "bows" to the second—and maybe the third—delicious sweet rolls which come from "Chef's" oven. Those who build a nobler serving of rolls than Mrs. Downey's will have much to do. Mrs. Downey sells many rolls from her flourishing pastry and preserves counter, for the guests like to "take some home."

Although you will enjoy the rolls more served in the inn atmosphere—as well as other foods—yet Mrs. Downey has generously given some of her recipes for Post readers who may want to use them at home. The following is her recipe for Olney Inn rolls.

Olney Inn Rolls

Put ¾ pound shortening, 2 tablespoons salt and 1 cup sugar in 2 quarts skimmed milk and let it get warm. Break 5 eggs and mix. Place eggs, mixture and ½ pound Fleischman's yeast in Hobart Mixer and let it become thoroughly mixed, and add 5 pounds of flour gradually until dough is well mixed. Take from mixer and place in well greased pan. Grease over top of dough and set in refrigerator to rise. Should rise in 3½ to 4 hours. Take out and roll on floured board. Cut out rolls and place in pans and then let rise until they are ready to bake. For variations, brown sugar, butter and nuts are placed in a pan and baked in the mixture. Also sometimes raisins are added to the dough and baked, and while the rolls are still hot they are dusted with powered sugar.

Since Thanksgiving is almost here, Mrs. Downey has also given some excellent suggestions for orange sauce to use with roast duck. Here are her directions:

Orange Sauce

Mix well 1 pint of orange marmalade, 1 pint peeled and seeded Malaga grapes, ½ cup oranges peeled and cut up and ½ cup sherry. Let stand until ready to serve. Serve it in a side dish with roast duck.

The traditional pumpkin pie will take on new allure when made by the recipe Mrs. Downey has given for making it.

Pumpkin Pie With Honey Whipped Cream and Black Walnuts

Mix together ½ cup sugar, ⅝ teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons pastry flour, ½ tablespoon cinnamon, 1-3 teaspoon each of nutmeg and ginger. Add 1½ cups pumpkin to the dry ingredients, then add ¼ cup corn sirup and 1½ cups milk. Let this mixture stand 1 hour. At the end of hour, add 2 whole beaten eggs. Pour into a pie shell and bake 40 minutes at 450 degree. Makes 10-inch pie.

To make topping, use 1 cup whipping cream, 1 tablespoon honey and black walnuts as desired.

A Hobby Makes Useful Work For Idle Hands

For those odd moments when there seems to be nothing to occupy one's mind and hands a hobby may be the answer. Hobbies are a splendid way to give self-expression to one's talents and often lead on to a livelihood. Such is the story of a young man who was convalescing in the Veteran's Hospital, Ashville, N. C.

Stuart Nye decided to occupy his time by hammering silver. The first motif he chose was the dogwood blossom. The inspiration came from his knowledge of the tradition of the origin of dogwood At the time of the crucifixion, the dogwood attained the size of the oak and other forest trees. So strong and firm was the wood that it was chosen as the timber of the Cross. It so distressed Jesus that that the tree should be used for such a cruel purpose, that He made a promise to the dogwood that never again should the tree grow large enough to be used as a cross, but should be slender and twisted, and the blossoms be in the form of a cross—two long and two short petals. In the center of the outer edge of the petals there would be nail prints, and in the center of the flower, brown with rust and stained with blood, should be a crown of thorns, so that all seeing it would remember it was upon the dogwood tree that Jesus was crucified.

The sale of Mr. Nye's handwrought pieces went so well that he took on an assistant, and later it became necessary for him to increase his staff to six. Among the articles he has made are bracelets, bar pins, tie clips, pins and rings. They are made not only in the dogwood pattern, but in such patterns as the butterfly, Scottie, chicory, sea horse, trillim, feather, beech leaf, maple leaf, ivy oak and galax, poinsettis, quill, arrow, wild rose and pine cone.

D. C. Has Finest Apples on Its Very Step

Delicious, McIntosh Among the Favored Types for Eating

WASHINGTONIANS are lucky to live in a section of the country noted for excellent apples. All they have to do is to reach out their hands and take some of the finest quality apples in the world from Virginia. As you drive through the State you see apples on bent, gnarled trees, for apples are plentiful this autumn.

Of course, Virginia does not have the apple market completely cornered, for the States of Washington, New York and California are also among the highest producing apple States. Whether you prefer the wine-red beauties, apples striped with yellow, or the blushing ones, you will find they are at the lowest prices in years.

It is well to know apples by name and buy the best variety for each. The McIntosh makes a bright showing in the fruit bowl and the type to eat from the hand, although it can be cooked and still not lose its beauty or its flavor. It makes a smooth pink-tinted apple sauce. The Northern Spy makes an excellent dumpling. First choice of the Easterners, through the generations, is the perfect all-around Baldwin apple for eating and cooking. This variety is unexcelled for pies and it has been said when better apples are grown, the Baldwin will be a part of it. Jonathan and Grimes Golden apples are all-purpose apples. The Delicious and McIntosh are favored eating apples.

Many Uses Possible

This king of fruit is adaptable to many uses—sparkling cider, jelly, apple butter, dried and canned, and a myriad of delicious dishes. But the apple has other merits than its appetite appeal, for it possesses an array of health values. It contains vitamins C, B, and G, and also important minerals. When eaten with the skin on, the apple helps to keep the digestive tract in good order.

Pork and apples is another combination and pork shoulder with apple dressing is a splendid cold weather pivotal dish.

Pork Shoulder-Apple Dressing

Remove bones from a fresh pork shoulder. Sew up around the edges, leaving small opening on one side for dressing. Wipe meat with damp cloth. Season with salt and pepper. Fill the pocket with apple dressing and roast in uncovered pan in moderate oven, allowing about 30 minutes for each pound. About 30 minutes before roast is done, remove from oven, score fat in diagonals each way, insert clove in center of each diamond. Sprinkle liberally with brown sugar and return to the oven to brown and finish cooking. The dressing is made cutting 4 slices of bacon in little squares. Brown the bacon and add 1½ cups coarse bread crumbs, 1 cup chopped apples and salt and pepper.

The apples can take on a different guise if made int oa Corn Flake Charlotte. It is easily prepared and the crunchiness of the corn flakes and the smoothness of the apple sauce give a distinctive dish.

Corn Flake Charlotte

Starting with 2½ cups corn flakes, spread a layer of corn flake crumbs in a buttered casserole. Cover with 2 cups sweetened apple sauce, to which the rind of ½ lemon or the juice of ½ orange or lemon has been added. Top with corn flakes and dot with butter. Bake for 15 minutes in a moderately hot oven, 400 degrees. Serve with milk or cream or whipped cream. Six to eight servings.

Spiced crab apples are a pleasant addition to a relish plate. Apple cups filled with sweet potatoes are lovely to look at and good to eat. Another virtue is that they may be prepared in advance and reheated for 10 minutes in a moderate oven before serving.

Use for Juice

Here is a new use for those left-over canned fruit juices: Quarter and peel some apples, simmer them until tender in peach, apricot, pear or pineapple juice. Add a little cinnamon and cloves and serve warm or cold as a meat or fowl garnish. Chilled, they make a refreshing salad combined with diced lettuce and salad dressing. Put in a few broken nuts for crunchiness.

Welfare Association Plans To Boost Funds to Agencies

3-Man Committee Named to Study Ways to Increase Contributions; Play Facilities of U. S. Workers to Be Expanded

By Alfred Friendly

Strike or no strike, the Welfare and Recreation Association is making plans to give increased financial contributions to departmental welfare and athletic associations.

The association, operator of Government building cafeterias, turns over a portion of its profits each year to individual welfare associations in agencies where the cafeterias are located. This money is used for loans to needy employes, payment of funeral expenses, etc.

Threatened as it is by a walkout of its union employes, the association has, nevertheless, named a three-man committee to study ways and means of increasing its annual distribution, with special emphasis on contributions to expand facilities for Federal employes.

Under its present peration, the association pays half of its annual profits to the Government as rent. The other half is divided among contributions to the welfare societies, expansion of association facilities and reserves.

The committee will canvass athletic associations in Government agencies for suggestions on how best to coordinate recreation activities, and in what points increased financial aid could be used.

The association's strike threat, meanwhile, remains unchanged. There is a possibility of conferences today, however, with John M. Carmody, Federal Works administrator, to seek a settlement. Carmody's legal and accounting staffs are now seeking to unravel claims and counterclaims of association and union.

As a starting propaganda gun in its 1940 population count, the Census Bureau hopes to have newsreel cameras present when the occupant of 1600 Pennsylvania avenue is interviewed by the census taker. The sound track will be cut off, however, when the householder answers the first question. This is because the law forbids revealing any individual answer on the census questionnaire.

The enumerator will say, "Your name, please," but no answer will be heard. The reply, disclosed here at the risk of Federal prosecution, will be "Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

Dissension notes: Robert C. Smith, Labor Department personnel officer, is being boomed for the post of the late Richardson Saunders, department administrative and budget officer. Strings are being pulled and heat turned on. The department's bureau heads, to a man—and woman—are equally active in their opposition to the appointment.

Feelings are wounded and embarrassment is rife at the National Resources Planning Board, where research experts Gardiner C. Means and Hildegarde Kneeland are the unwilling objects of an exit drive. Means and Miss Kneeland have each turned out a brace of superb studies, but the board believes that their work is done, and has long since whittled down their staffs. Neither, however, agrees with the board's analysis of the situation or shows any disposition to stop working for it.

There are rumors that Dan H. Wheeler will get the job of running the Bituminous Coal Commission in the Interior Department should its present boss, Howard A. Gray, get the Undrsrtaryship. Th story is giving liberals in the department a fine case of the jitters. They claim Wheeler is a reactionary and they don't like it.

A year or two ago, startled Government officials found that if a Federal employe died while away from his office on official business, the Government could not pay for returning the man's remains, although it would have paid his rail fare home if he were alive. The case arose when a Maritime Commission inspctor, stationed here, died on a field trip to the West Coast. His widow had to bear the cost. The Comptroller General said so.

To forestall any recurrence of this situation, the commission obtained a special provision in its current appropriation act, allowing it to make such expenditures if necessary. Many other agencies took pains to get a similar clause included in their budget laws.

Planes Must Have Two-Way Phones

Installation of two-way radio telephone facilities in all planes operated by Pan American Airways was ordered yesterday by the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

The accident February 19, in which a Pan American flying boat sank in the harbor of San Juan, Puerto Rico, was caused by the plane bouncing off a wave into a stall "from which recovery was not accomplished," the CAA's air safety board reported.

Contributing causes, the report said, were slowness of radio telegraph communications and failure to transmit information on "the steadily increasing amplitude and intensity of swells in the landing area" to the pilot.

City's Heads To Get Seal's Plan Tuesday

Department Dropped, Insurance Lumped With Corporations

A revised Seal plan calling for 11 municipal departments will be submitted to the Commissioners next Tuesday, it was announced yesterday by District officials.

One last minute change, the transfer of the present Insurance Department to the proposed Department of Corporations, was voted yesterday by the Commissioners' "kitchen cabinet," which adopted the reorganization plan earlier this week.

Functions Similar

Corporation Counsel Seal, who authored the plan for revising District government, said the functions of the Insurance Department were similar to those proposed for the Corporations Department.

Rufus S. Lusk, president of the Washington Taxpayers Association, declared that formation of a finance department will greatly improve administration.

"The setting up of a department of finance will produce a much needed coordination between such offices as the Collector of Taxes and the Assessor," he told the Junior Board of Commerce at the Annapolis Hotel.

"It likewise should increase tax collections," he added. "The consolidation of various agencies into a dozen or so departments is a reform that has been long needed and will greatly facilitate the transaction of business with the government by citizens."

Urges More Local Powers

Lusk advocated increasing the powers of the Commissioners to permit them to function as city administrators "without having to run to Congress every time the name of a street is to be changed or a pipe laid."

Broadened powers for city government should not include levying of taxes other than the fixing of "real and tangible tax rates within certain rigidly defined limits," Lusk said.

He pointed out the city manager plan for municipal administration has been found "the best method yet devised for running a city . . ." and regretted it was not included in the "kitchen cabinet" plan for administrative reorganization here.

2 Workmen Hurt In Accidents Here

Two workmen were under treatment at hospitals last night, victims of construction job accidents.

Nathan Burker, 26, of Charles Town, W. Va., a concrete worker, suffered undetermined back injuries when he plunged 30 feet after a scaffold collapsed at the south end of the Key Bridge. He was taken to Georgetown Hospital.

Tony Castiglione, 44, of 1323 Tenth street northwest, was treated at Emergency Hospital for a possible skull fracture received when a pipe with which he was tightening a cable slipped from his hand and spun around. The man was employed on a sewer project at the foot of Thirtieth street northwest.

U. S. Workers Ask Help From ADA

Bearing a petition with 914 names, a committee of the United Federal Workers of America yesterday told John Ihdler, executive officer of the ADA, in effect, that the District's high-rent problem is becoming intolerable for the $1,200 to $2,000 Government worker and asked relief.

Ihdler said that while there is nothing to prevent low-salaried Federal employes from renting the subsidized dwellings built by ADA, development of a housing project exclusively for them is a different matter. The legal questions involved will be studied by members and advisers of the Alley Dwelling Authority.

Hunt Country Parties Beckon to Capitalites

Many to Entertain in Connection With Fall Race Meeting at Middleburg; Mrs. Roosevelt Gives Luncheon for Cabinet Women

By Hope Ridings Miller,

WITH A RECORD CROP of parties on tap both here and in the Virginia hunting country, Capitalites will be out and about for a steady round of luncheons, dinners, teas and cocktail parties from now until Monday.

As usual, the week-end whirl that whips itself into a grade-A froth by Sunday night, begins to gather speed on Thursday. And yesterday's calendar was no exception.

Mrs. Roosevelt started the ball rolling with a luncheon for the Cabinet ladies who meet annually and informally at the White House about this time of year to discuss plans for the season's round of entertaining.

Mrs. Ernest Gruening, wife of the newly appointed Governor of Alaska, was guest of honor at a small luncheon given at the Shoreham by Mrs. Barnet Nover. Others in the party were Mrs. Anthony J. Dimond, wife of the Congressional Delegate from Alaska; Mrs. Stanley K. Hornbeck, Mrs. Olaf Saugstad, Mrs. Edward C. Moran, jr., Mrs. Lester Schoene, Mrs. Reardon Young, Mrs. Bernard Kilgore, Mrs. William T. Stone and Mrs. Helena Glassey.

SOCIETY-GO-ROUND: Mrs. Marshall O. Exnicios entertained at the second in a series of cocktail parties yesterday afternoon from 5 to 7 p. m. She will give another in a week or so.

Justice and Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone were the guests in whose honor Judge and Mrs. Ernest van Fossan entertained at dinner last night in their apartment at 2101 Connecticut avenue. Covers were laid for 12. Another on the list of last night's parties was the dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock.

Speaking of dinners—two of special interest will go on the boards tonight. The Commercial Secretary of the British Embassy and Mrs. J. P. Summerscale will entertain a small company, and Mrs. McCeney Werlich will be hostess to another. Mrs. Lionel Atwill, who is the wife of the actor, daughter of Mrs. Edward T. Stotesbury and sister of James Cromwell, will be guest of honor at Mrs. Werlich's dinner. The Canadian Minister, Loring Christie, will be ranking guest.

The Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. George Messersmith will have a small group in for cocktails tomorrow afternoon when Mr. and Mrs. Russell Snodgrass will entertain at a similar party. Another event on tomorrow's calendar is the small luncheon to be given by Mrs. Effingham Townsend and her daughter, Peggy, in honor of Miss Jean Hall, who will spend the winter with them.

As to the hunt country parties that will swirl about the Middleburg fall race meeting tomorrow—well, two of the largest on schedule are the luncheons to be given by Miss Charlotte Noland and Mrs. Daniel C. Sands. But there are scores of other smaller get-togethers that will also attract a sizable number of local celebrities.

DIPLOMATIC CIRCLING: The Chinese Ambassador, Dr. Hu Shih, attended the Bowl of Rice dinner given at the Pierre Hotel in New York last night. . . . The event was for the benefit of civilian relief in China. . . . The Ambassador is expected to return to Washington today. . . . The Greek Minister, Demetrios Sicilianos, is back after a brief visit in New York. . . . Senora de Cardenas, wife of the Spanish Ambassador, came back yesterday after a trip to New York. . . The Irish Minister and Mrs. Robert Brennan will be off today for Martinsburg, W. Va., where the envoy will officiate at the crowning of the crowning of the king of the winter apple festival. . . . Ambassador to Germany Hugh R. Wilson and Mrs. Wilson are at the Hampshire House in New York. . . . He will return to Washington on Sunday.

U. S. Legations Fewer, but They Still Keep Mrs. Robbins, Decorator, Busy

THOUGH THE NUMBER of United States embassies and legations is dwindling, as country after country in Europe is liquidated, there is no busier person in Washington than Mrs. Warren Delano Robbins, who has to do with the decorating and furnishing of our Government's properties abroad.

Thinking up color schemes and such is the least of Mrs. Robbins' job. She has been experimenting with all sorts of fascinating fabrics, among them some new curtains made out of glass, which are destined for the palace of the High Commissioner to the Philippines. These wonderful new curtains will not shrink, stretch or burn.

One of Mrs. Robbins' problems concerns closets in the legations in hot, damp countries. . . . to fix them so that m[oths] won't grow in the Minister's shoes," she says, "or any other kind of vegetables."

Furniture at our embassies in Warsaw and the legations in Prague and Vienna, are being left in those countries for the time being, to be used by the consuls which we still maintain there. Thus they will be in good hands until the State Department decides how to dispose of them.

THE FATE of Edward Kulikowski, handsomest diplomat ever to come to Washington, is worrying members of the Polish Embassy staff here. When government officials fled Warsaw for Rumania, Mr. Kulikowski was in a refugee train which was bombed by the Germans. His friends here have not been able to get in communication with him and pray he was not among those killed. The diplomat, who served at the embassy here as secretary until two or three years ago, was head of the press section of the foreign office when war broke out.

Every member of the Polish Embassy staff has relatives in Poland from whom they have not heard a word since hostilities began. One of them is Countess Lasocka, who believes her father, former Polis Minister to France, fled to that part of Poland which was later captured by the Russians. The State Department is effort to help her. The young, cabling Berlin frequently in an dark-haired countess, who arrived here several weeks ago with her husband, is one of the most attractive women of the diplomatic corps, and all the men say that they are falling rapidly in love with her.

"I FEEL just like a ghost," remarked a member of the State Department as he wandered about at the small, informal dance which the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. A. A. Berle gave on Wednesday evening at Woodley. This is the home of former Secretary of State and Mrs. Henry Stimson, and during the Hoover Administration our friend attended many a gay party and important conference there. All the Stimson furniture, and even the portraits and objets d'art, are still as the owners left them.

There were belles a-plenty at the little party. Edith Wright, in pale pink, had supper with three men, while her sister, Mary, whirled about the dance floor. One of the loveliest dresses—pastel blue with a full skirt—was worn by Beatrice Phillips, daughter of our Ambassador to Italy. She is working at the Red Cross this winter and living at the Anchorage.

4,000 New Garments Assembled for Guild

Washington Needlework Branch Today Will Distribute Clothing and Linens Among Agencies Which Are Its Beneficiaries

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

The Post Club Editor.

More than 4,000 new garments were assembled yesterday at the Church of the Covenant, Eighteenth street and Connecticut avenue, for the annual in-gathering of the Washington Branch of the Needlework Guild of America. The guild, "a charity which helps all charities," will distribute the articles of clothing and linens today among agencies which are its beneficiaries.

It is one organization which devotes only a day or two each season to meetings and whose members belong to it for no reason except to help others. The membership dues are two new garments or the equivalent in money, to be collected at the annual in-gathering for distribution through the city's various charitable agencies. Mrs. H. L. Wyman is the active president of the Washington Branch, of which Mrs. Charles Evans Hughes, wife of the Chief Justice, is honorary president. Under Mrs. Wyman are section presidents, each responsible for at least 120 garments, but often bringing in as many as 500. Under them are directors, each of whom gathers in the contributions of ten members. The only work is the check-up through these workers each fall and the collection and classification of garments. The donations have been on display for two days, at the church, arranged by sizes and kinds—warm, new clothing for men, women and children, everything from underwear to caps and sweaters.

The Guild Follows Ideals of Founder

The guild follows the ideals of the founder, Lady Wolverton, who started it in London in 1885, realizing the importance of giving needy persons new garments instead of cast-offs.

In addition to individuals who contribute, there are several groups including the board of the Florence Crittenton Home, nurses and doctors who form a group at Walter Reed Hospital, the Women's City Club, Washington Chapter of the National Council of Jewish Women, and National Council of Jewish Juniors. There are also colored groups under Mrs. Helen Wills, who contribute more than 200 garments, all of which they make.

Each of the officers heads a section. These include Mrs. Boyd Taylor, Mrs. G. Thomas Dunlop and Mrs. Acheson Hassa, past presidents, who are now vice presidents; Mrs. Edward C. Robinson, secretary, and Mrs. John Kratz, treasurer.

Guild Contributes To Many Charities

Among the charities to which the guild contributes are the Aged Women's Home, the American Legion, District Red Cross, Red Cross at Walter Reed Hospital, Americanization School, Central Union Mission, needy children leaving Children's Hospital, Children's Protective Association, Pre-Natal Clinic of Columbia Hospital, Student Aid of the P.-T. A., Episcopal City Mission, Family Service Association, Florence Crittenton Home, Friendship House, Gallinger and Municipal Hospitals Georgetown Children's Home, Glen Dale Sanitorium, Gospel Mission, Hebrew Home for the Aged, House of Detention, St. Anne's Infant Asylum, Salvation Army, Southern Relief Home, Juvenile Court, Volunteers of America, Federation of Churches, Washington Home for Foundlings, James C. Birney School, National Association for Destitute Children and free patients at the Home for Incurables.

Capt. Milliken Backs Girls' Club In Georgetown

Capt. Rhoda Milliken, of the Women's Bureau of the Metropolitan Police Department, addressed the National Woman's Club yesterday at its meeting at the Highlands.

She commended their plan of establishing a girls' club under proper supervision in Georgetown, and said, in her opinion, that section was one of the best in the city for working out such an experiment.

If the project were successful there, she said, it could be used as a pattern and would illustrate the need for additional recreation personnel when appropriations were asked for in Congress. Supervised recreation is the only answer to the problem of growing boys and girls, she declared.

The club, of which Mrs. Charles P. Keyser is president, went on record opposing the transfer of American ships to Panama registry in order to enter combat zones and declared the United States should not resort to any kind of subterfuge. The Neely bill, eliminating block booking and blind selling of motion pictures, also was indorsed.

Women of Moose Plan Book Program

Mrs. Alice McNulty, recently appointed chairman of the library committee of the local chapter of the Women of the Moose, will announce plans for the chapter's National Book Week, November 5 to 11, at the regular meeting tonight. A review of late books by a guest speaker and a talk by the senior regent, Mrs. Howard J. Clark, on the origin and significance of Book Week, will be on the program.

Since 1930, the Women of the Moose have exemplified the objectives of National Book Week by holding a book shower for the library at Mooseheart, the order's home for orphans. There are now more than 18,000 books in Mooseheart's libraries and this year, the local membership will have its shower for the library at Dixie Hall, a cottage at Mooseheart, which has been "adopted" by the local chapter.

Books Are 'Tickets' at Church Federation Tea and Mrs. Roosevelt Brings Three

BOOKS were "tickets" yesterday at the last of the three book teas of the Washington Federation of Churches, and the First Lady, who was the guest of honor, brought three. Her gifts were "Mr. Emmanuel," by Louis Golding; "The Arrogant History of White Ben," by Clemence Dane, and "The Face of a Nation," by Thomas Wolfe. There was no inscription in the books but they will be properly designated as gifts from Mrs. Roosevelt when they go on the shelves of Gallinger Hospital library.

Yesterday's guests boosted the book contributions by 700, bringing the number near the 2,000 goal.

Mrs. Roosevelt remained at the tea for the musical program by Suzanne P. Davis, of Baltimore, who played the theramin.

AUSPICIOUS START—The first of the monthly luncheons of the Woman's Guild of Central Union Mission brought out 50 members and guests yesterday. The women are now making Christmas bags, which will be distributed to "Santas" and Mrs. Santas" around Washington and filled for mission children's Christmas party at one of the local theaters.

PEACE IN EUROPE.—Pictures made in Europe last summer, peaceful landscapes and seascapes, and peasant people, were displayed by Abel K. Warshawsky, noted artist and guest of honor yesterday at the Newspaper Women's tea at the Raleigh Hotel. Although he has been home from abroad just 18 days, he talked of art rather than war and had no adventures to relate.

Katharine Brooks, club president, was assisted in receiving by Helene Kravatz, Katharine McKiever and Leila Mechlin. Alternating at the tea tables were Mrs. Felix Morley, Mrs. Rudolph Max Kauffmann, Mrs. Curt C. Schiffeler, Mrs. Claude Watts, Mrs. Kate Scott Brooks, honorary president of the club, and Margaret Germond.

MEETINGS TODAY.—Women's Alliance of All Souls' Church, with a book table under the direction of Mrs. Frank M. Eliot and a talk on books by Miss Beulah Folmsbee, managing editor of the Horn Book Magazine. Faculty Women's Club of G. W. U. meets at Dennison School. Thirteenth and Allison streets, for luncheon. Mrs. Henry Gratttan Doyle heads the hostess list.

MORE ON BOOKS—Mrs. Caroline Hughes, readers' adviser in the sociology department of the Public Library, yesterday addressed the education department of the Park View Woman's Club, which met with Mrs. William O. Gale, 4911 Illinois avenue. She traced the development of adult education from its inception, up to the founding of public libraries and the women's clubs.

A benefit luncheon, proceeds of which will go to the Health School at Thirteenth and Upshur, was served by a committee preceding the program. Mrs. D. E. Clark was chairman of the section. The guest of honor, president and past presidents of the club were seated in the dining room at a table appointed with a lace cloth, a centerpiece of autumn berries and foliage and lighted by orange candles in crystal holders.

Club Hears Dr. Ewerhardt

Personal and collective security depends on growing up with attitudes in which hostility, antagonisms, insecurities and immaturities do not figure largely, Dr. Paul Ewerhardt told members of the civics-education section of the Twentieth Century Club yesterday. Dr. Ewerhardt, who is director of the Washington Institute of Mental Hygiene, discussed "Psychiatry in a Community Place." He was introduced by his wife, who is chairman of the section.

Asserting that half of the annual budget of the country goes to combat crime and care for the insane, he declared there is a great need on the part of every community to give attention to the conditions in which people live.

"No family and no children can be expected to develop serviceable attitudes toward life under adverse conditions," he said.

He advocated provision of resources for the child of pre-school age to aid him to grow up and mature so as to be able to adapt himself to conditions and face reality.

The horizon of every area of the child's life from the time he is 5 years old, should be broadened so as to develop his capacities despite conditions which are not ideal, he said.

Wife Reads Speech By Rep. Voorhis

Mrs. Jerry Voorhis, wife of Representative Voorhis, of California, made his speech last night at the dinner of the Woman's National Democratic Club at the clubhouse, 1526 New Hampshire avenue. As he had returned home to vote, she read the address he had prepared on the condition of migrant workers in this country.

The Farm Security Administration, he said, has done a magnificent job in dealing with the problem of the 350,000 migrant families, but it is hampered by "a tragically inadequate budget."

Pointing out that the movement of these poverty stricken people from one State to another, following the harvests, was a Federal rather than a local problem, he urged that it be recognized and treated by Federal legislation. Immediate steps must be taken to provide more camps such as have already been established by the Farm Security Administration, to improve sanitation and provide medical care and education for the people, he said, with food, shelter and clothing, their first needs. He offered as a more permanent solution their establishment on small tracts of land in regions where there is considerable seasonal labor required.

The reading of the address was followed by questions answered by John S. Fisher, director of information for the Farm Security Administration.

400 Attend Card Party Given By League of G. O. P. Women

Benefit Function Held at Mrs. W. S. Corby's Home on Chevy Chase Circle; Hostess And Mrs. Edward E. Gann Receive

More than 400 yesterday attended the benefit card party given at the home of Mrs. William S. Corby, 9 Chevy Chase Circle, by the League of Republican Women. Mrs. Corby and Mrs. Edward E. Gann, president of the league, stood in the reception hall, with a background of palms and flowers, to receive the guests.

Mrs. Gann wore a gown of black brocade with a mink cape and a black hat trimmed with a veil. Mrs. Corby was also in black, her gown embroidered in gold thread and jade beads, and she wore a jade necklace.

Tables were arranged on the first floor in the music room, drawing room, library and dining room and also in several rooms of the second and third floors, where playing was in progress.

In the reception hall there were two tables for the sale of cake and candy. One of them attracted a throng of guests, not so much because of the food to be sold as because of the table itself.

It was the famous "Fox the Founder's Table," which Mrs. Corby brought back from England last summer, and which was made for one of her paternal ancestors in 1594. It weighs 450 pounds and has a sliver plate in the center, giving its history. Its name comes from the fact that George Fox, founder of the Quaker faith, held his meetings at her ancestor's home, where his followers gathered around the table to hear his doctrine.

Mrs. Corby learned of the table's existence in tracing her geneology at the Library of Congress, and located it at Ballifield Hall, in Yorkshire, a few months ago.

Prizes for high score for the card players were in keeping with the Republican scheme—small elephant vases. Mrs. G. Louis Weller was general chairman of the party.

Among the guests were Mrs. William Howard Taft, Mrs. James J. Davis, Mrs. Lowell F. Hobart, president of the National Society of New England Women, and past president general of the D. A. R.; Mrs. William E. Borah, Mrs. William N. Doak, Mrs. George Sutherland, Mrs. James Carroll Frazier, Mrs. Harrison Williams, Mrs. E. St. John Greble, Mrs. Gilbert Grosvenor, Mrs. Sidney Cloman, Mrs. John Henry Gibbons, Mrs. Virginia White Speel, Lady Leslie, Mrs. Edward F. Colladay, Mrs. David Colladay.

THE HECHT CO. TOYLAND OPENS TOMORROW! ON THE THIRD FLOOR

Souvenir Photograph of the REDSKIN TEAM to Every Boy and Girl Who Visits Toyland!

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

One of the charming features of professional football was nicely illustrated the other day by the Washington Redskins. They needed a blocking back, it seems. Injuries had riddled Coach Flaherty's backfield and with the important Brooklyn and Detroit games looming Flaherty's plight was fairly serious.

POVICH

Consider the college coach under the same circumstances. His star blocker is in the hospital and tough games with Whoozis Tech, Parent Teachers and Pitiful State are ahead. The college coach is virtually licked. His only recourse is to notify interested alumni and what with freshman rules in vogue, it would take them two years to produce another blocking back.

The professional coach encounters no such problem. Is it a blocking back he needs? He can hire one within 24 hours. That's what Ray Flaherty did a couple of days ago. The Chicago Cardinals had a blocking back they weren't using—Keith Berlim, a sturdy 196-pounder—and a telegram from Flaherty fetched him to Washington pronto in consideration of $1 and other valuables.

Blocking Backs Most Vital in Offense

It wasn't any haphazard selection by Flaherty incidentally, although he had never seen Berlim perform. But he knew where he could gain information concerning him. A telephone call across the country to San Jose, Calif., enabled the Redskin coach to talk to California friends who had seen Berlim in action. "Grab him," they advised.

For Flaherty that was all right as a starter, but who would know more about Berlim than Ernie Nevers, coach of the Cardinals? So Flaherty reached Nevers by telephone and talked to him as a old pal of Nevers' own playing days. The upshot was that Nevers told Flaherty the Redskins would be making no mistake in buying Berlim and the deal was made.

The professional coach is properly sympathetic when one of his ball players is hurt, but if the fellow happens to be a blocking back the coach almost feels it personally when the guy is hit. The blocking back is the coach's pet. He is the fellow who makes a football team's attack move. The coach knows a football team's offense will go only as far as the blocking backs take it.

That is why Ray Flaherty was properly disturbed when injuries during the season removed such Redskins as Jay Turner, Max Krause and Ed Justice from the lineup. They were blocking backs. In their absence, the Redskins still had five blocking backs, but as Flaherty views pro football, that isn't enough. "With only five blockers, we were in a terrible position," said Flaherty in a half-moan, despite the fact that only two blocking backs can be utilized in any one backfield.

Flaherty and his fellow coaches in the National League have developed profound theories about obtaining maximum results. Only in exceptional cases do they expect more than 15 minutes of 100 per cent football from their charges. Thus fresh reinforcements are a vital part of their plans. The 60-minute football player is wonderful but rare.

The Redskins team their blocking backs with a view to maximum results. Because blockers who may be equally efficient may not team well together, coaches search for pairs who do team work well. Thus it is that Ernie Pinckert and Boyd Morgan comprise one pair, Jimmy Johnston and Johnny Spirida another. Flaherty has decided that his newcomer, Berlim, will work best with Jim Meade.

It's the age of specialization in football.

Missourian Sees Stars (Colored)

Justly famed for its talented Negro football players is the University of Iowa—alma mater of Duke Slater, Ozzie Simmons and Homer Harris. We do not vouch for the authenticity of this story, but if it happened anywhere it could have happened at Iowa.

As the story goes, the University of Missouri, boasting one of its best football teams, lined up against the Hawkeyes at Iowa City a few years ago and five minutes after the opening kickoff was pounding goalward on the Iowa 4-yard line.

In that situation, Missouri's best back was handed the ball on a play at left tackle. He was promptly slapped down for a 2-yard toss by a husky colored lad playing right tackle for Iowa.

Whereupon, the same big Missouri back was sent toward the opposite tackle on the next play. He didn't reach the scrimmage line. A big Negro guard heaved him for another 2-yard loss.

Missouri's strategy then called for a play through center. The same Missouri back charged at the middle of the line and was slammed for a yard loss by a big Negro backer-up.

Came fourth down and Missouri tried an end run with the same back, now a bit groggy, carrying the ball.

Iowa's left end crashed through the interference and brought the Missourian down with a teeth-rattling tackle for another loss.

The ball carrier got up in a daze. Noting that his tackler this time was a white boy, he walked toward him woodenly and offered his outstretched hand, mumbling:

"Dr. Livingston, I presume."

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Nov. 9.—The sturdy tories of baseball—and you cant' throw a rock at a league meeting without braining four of them—will emerge from the Cincinnati baseball convention next month with severe cases of swollen neck muscles: From wagging their heads negatively at a cluster of progressive proposals.

CONSIDINE

They will apopletically reject, in the order named, Clark Griffith's proposal to turn all week-day games played during July and August into night games; Griffith's proposition of limiting all big league clubs to one farm team in each classification; Larry MacPhail's plan of matching up the seven also-rans of each league in a post-season series; and least, but not last, Sam Breadon's plot to put the baseball laborers on a six-day week.

MacPhail, who brought night baseball into the majors, will be the loudest critic of Griffith's night-ball plot. Larry doesn't believe baseball can afford to allow a big league team more than seven night dates out of 77 home games, if the game hopes to preserve its traditional identity as a daytime enterprise. Griffith will argue that the revenue from only seven games would be so little that it would take three or four years of such modest campaigning to pay for the installation of modern lights.

One Flaw in Griffith's Plan

Griffith's hope of cutting down on such baseball monopolies as the Yankees, Cardinals and one or two others, will, of course, be doomed by those moguls who vote in the interests of the Yankees, Cardinals and one or two others. The flaw in Griff's plan, even if it were adopted, is that today the Yankee organization can get just about any promising young ball player it wants. The routine of the Yank scouts is to approach the young sensation, advise him to listen to the offers of every other scout, pick out the best one, and then the Yanks will give him more. An offer like that can't be turned down—particularly in view of the fact that the average kid would sign with the Yankees for less, just in the hope of some day getting on the team and sharing in the World Series dough which inevitably comes to men in Yankee uniform.

The MacPhail plan will be rejected for several reasons, the Yanks, Reds, Red Sox and probably the Cubs and Cards will turn thumbs down on it for fear that it would take the punch and some of the profit out of the World Series. The timorous men among the other owners will turn it down for fear that it would conclusively prove, one way or another, the fallacy or truth of the National League's tiresome assertions that its loop is better balanced and that only the Yanks are out of step.

Breadon's Idea Isn't New

As for Breadon's plan, what he proposes is nothing much more than what he has been doing for years. He created the phoney Sunday doubleheader, at the expense of taking a game away from a week day. For a long time he called off games when the so-called rain, which prompted him to do so, was about as heavy as the cloudburst given off by a sneeze. But of late he had summarily picked up games here and put them there, usually put them on Sundays. And in this he has had the hearty co-operation of the teams which come to St. Louis—for they too find it depressing to play before those towering piles of empty seats and bored ushers. The Senators once tried to play two successive series against the Browns, on one trip to the city, because it cost them so much more to ship their athletes into the city than they realized from the games.

But the central reason why this and the other proposals will be shelved, with righteous vigor, is that these are new ideas. And new ideas in baseball, constitute a rank case of un-Americanism, in the minds of the old gaffers who operate the business.

Georgetown Students Pledge Support to Grid Team in Big Pep Rally

Around a tremendous bonfire which lighted up the Georgetown intramural field like a mid-day August sun and gave off such heat that it was dangerous to stand within 50 feet of the blaze, Hoya students last night climaxed pre-game celebration for tomorrow's grid engagement with Maryland. Miss Cotter's First Victory In National

Knockdown and Out Class Won After Jump-Off; Smacko Also Triumphs

By Anne Hagner

New York, Nov. 9.—In one of the best performances seen in this, the greatest show of all, Margaret Cotter's Rocksie won the knockdown-and-out class before 10,000 cheering spectators at the National Horse Show tonight.

Rocksie took his ribbon the hard way, jumping off with Mrs. Edward Lasker's Modernistic, Glendhu Farm's The Thruster, and Donald Sutherland's High Tide, all of whom went clean the first time around. In fact, the first trip over the course was the toughest as far as Rocksie was concerned, for Miss Cotter's stirrup leather broke over the second fence and it was nearly 5 minutes before they bay gelding could continue.

First Victory

Washingtonians and Virginians feared that Rocksie would not be able to break the jinx that has apparently been following him this week, especially when Modernistic went clean until the last fence. However, Miss Cotter's 9-year-old was never in better form as he clicked around the course, and his victory brought forth one of the biggest ovations heard in the Garden during the entire show.

This is the first blue ribbon Rocksie has won in three trips to the National. Last year he won several minor awards in open classes, but was unable to penetrate the winner's circle.

Wins Jump-Off

First negotiating the stiff course with a clean performance, Smacko jumped off with Capt. G. M. Kaufmann's Martin against time to finally win the class with only 4 faults and 40 seconds. Martin placed second by completing the ten-jump course in 46 seconds with 12 faults.

In another event that proved that Thursday is definitely the day for Southerners to shine, Fred Hughes' Black Caddy and Eleanor Moffett's Candolette each qualified in the difficult open jumping class known as the "pen," for which finals will be held tomorrow night. Caddy, still with Lisbeth Stieg in the saddle pending the healing of his owner's infected hand, turned in his best performance of the show to be numbered among 11 others jumping off tomorrow night.

Jacobus Resigns as P.G.A. Head

President Quits To Avoid 'Stormy' Session at Meeting In Chicago, Nov. 13

By the United Press

New York, Nov. 9.—George Jacobus today announced his retiremept as president of tae Professional Golfers Association, after serving in that capacity for six years.

JACOBUS

Jacobus said he would not run for the office at the annual meeting in Chicago November 13-15 because he wished to avoid a "split" in the ranks of the organization.

If Jacobus had run for president, a stormy session was expected because of the trouble at the last National P. G. A. tournament in New York last July over the eligibility of Denny Shute.

Jacobus overruled his executive committee and let Shute play after the committee had ruled Denny ineligible because he was unintentionally late paying his annual dues.

"I feel that my retirement will avoid a split," Jacobus said. "In that controversy last July I stuck by the players and I understand they are trying to draft me for the office. I feel I have been president long enough and that it is time I make room for a successor who will carry on for the good of the players and the P. G. A."

Jimmy Dykes, At 42, Remains On Active List

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Jimmy Dykes' legs say "No," but his heart still says "Yes."

The 42-year-old Chicago White Sox manager, in announcing the 1940 reserve list of 39 players for his club, disclosed today he is remaining on the active list for next season, even though it is unlikely he will get into more than one or two games. The one-time star third baseman for the Philadelphia Athletics played in two or three games last summer.

DYKES

While his legs no longer will stand the strain of constant play, Dykes still can throw with the best of them, his great arm remaining one of baseball's mysteries.

N. C. Freshmen Beaten, 14-7, By Virginia

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Va., Nov. 9.—Virginia's freshman eleven closed its season by defeating the first-year team of North Carolina here today, 14 to 7, before a crowd of 3,000 undergraduates.

The young Cavaliers registered touchdowns in the first and fourth periods. The first came early in the opening quarter and followed an 80-yard sprint by Quarterback McCown, who took a shovel pass from West and raced to Carolina's 3-yard stripe. On the third down Daly crashed through tackle for the score, and Creighton's placement kick added the extra point.

The hefty Tarheel squad exhibited much power during the second quarter and twice advanced the ball to Virginia's 20-yard mark. Their first opportunity to score came following a fumble by Daly, and the second was ended when West intercepted a pass and returned the ball to Virginia's 33-yard line.

Back again came Carolina mid-

Broken Foot Will End Marquette Star's Career

Milwaukee, Nov. 9 (AP).—The collegiate football career of Dave Braden, brilliant senior guard for Marquette's Golden Avalanche, was ended today with the report that a broken foot would keep him idle the rest of the season. Aside from Braden, a Milwaukee boy, the squad was in good shape for Saturday's game here with Iowa State College of Ames.

Cockerel Wins Sagamore At Pimlico

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent.

Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 9.—With Victory Morn withdrawn by Maxwell Howard, his new owner, 14 rough and ready 2-year-olds battled it out for the chief honors in the fourth running of the Sagamore Handicap, today's $2,500 added feature. Alvin Untermyer's Cockerel, capably handled by Jockey L. Balaski, forged to the finish line a length and a quarter in front of his nearest opposition at the end of 6 furlongs.

The Dixiana Stable's Siroco saved the second money by a neck margin over J. W. Y. Martin's Abrasion. Faymar, a stablemate of Sirocco, finished fourth and a head farther back.

The race was a thriller from start to finish, but proved a rough contest. In fact, there were so many of the juveniles with excuses that a re-run might have reversed the entire order of finish.

However, everything was hotsie totsie for backers of Cockerel, who lined up for the $20.80 return for each and every $2 investment. Cockeral ran the 6 furlongs in a creditable 1:13.

The unique in racing occurred as the program began. D. B. Midkiff's Dixieland was left caged in the new Puett starting gate when the doors of her stall failed to come open. The start was from the 6-furlong

Hoyas' Big Pep Rally Noisy But Peaceful

No Sabotage Detected as 600 G. U. Students And Alumni Hear Speeches by Grid Players, Parade Through Streets, Cheer Before Bonfire

By Jack Munhall.

Dancing around one of the largest and brightest bonfires ever to light up Georgetown University's hallowed campus in an eerie shimmering glow, Hoya's students and alumni last night climaxed celebration for tomorrow's homecoming football game with University of Maryland.

Unlike the pep rally which preceded the contest with George Washington two weeks ago, last night's program unraveled smoothly and without any such untoward incident as the premature lighting of the bonfire by persons unknown.

The rally, in which some 600 students, alumni and friends of the Hilltop participated, began at the quadrangle with speeches by members of the football team, continued with a torchlight parade down O street to Wisconsin, thence up Volta place to Georgetown Visitation Convent, and ended with the bonfire on Intramural Field.

Girl Students Benefit

On Thirty-fifth street to the enthusiastic approval of the Visitation girls who crowded all windows and overflowed onto the second floor balcony of the old red building, the parade reached its zenith of noise and excitement. The 60-piece school band blared out the stirring strains of "Sons of Georgetown" and the students cheered lustily as they waved their banners and placards.

"Georgetown, Pride of the District," and "Bulldogs Want Terrapin Soup" were among the inscriptions on the long strips of cloth which the students mounted on sticks and thrust defiantly into the chill night air.

After the rally broke up, the band and football squad were bundled into automobiles and a bus and

G. U. Freshmen 5-2 Favorites Over Maryland

Little Hoya Eleven Outweighs Rivals in Stadium Battle Today

Outweighing their rivals at least 10 pounds per man, Georgetown University's freshman grid forces will rule a 5-2 choice to end an all-winning season this afternoon with a victory over Maryland's Cubs at Griffith Stadium. The game is scheduled for 2 o'clock and about 4,000 fans are expected.

The Hoyas, with a line averaging about 190 pounds and a backfield that will weigh 180, will be gunning for their fourth straight victory, while the Terps will be seeking their second triumph in four games. Georgetown's latest start was a 12-0 win over the George Washington Cubs, and Maryland's was a 6-0 upset over the V. M. I. yearlings. Previously, the Little Terps had been walloped by George Washington's

Henry Armstrong to Retire After Three More Battles

By the Associated Press

Hot Springs, Ark., Nov. 9.—Henry Armstrong, world's welterweight champion, announced here today that he would retire from the ring next summer.

ARMSTRONG

The Negro fighter, who recenly lost his lightweight crown to Lou Ambers and vacated his claim to the junior welterweight championship, said he probably would have three more fights before hanging up the gloves.

Armstrong is scheduled to fight Ambers a return match December 1 and to meet Jimmy Garrison at Cleveland on December 11. Garrison recently went ten rounds with the champion on the Coast.

During the past month Armstrong has been a busy campaigner, knocking out a number of lightly regarded opponents in the Far West.

The rise of Armstrong from a St. Louis bootblack to the holder of three world's titles was one of the prize ring's most sensational chapters. He wandered to the Pacific Coast and came out of the California bread lines to establish a reputation as an amateur fighter before plunging into professional bouts.

In his early professional career, Armstrong was sponsored by Actor Al Jolson. He later came under the management of Eddie Meade, veteran boxing figure, and it was under Meade that he compiled the string of successes which led to his three titles.

His ceaseless punching and boring-in tactics earned Armstrong the sobriquet of "Perpetual Motion" Armstrong. In virtually every bout his fighting style was the same—a furious two-fisted assault which wore down his challengers.

Mexican Repeats

By the Associated Press

New York, Nov. 9.—Capt. Ramiro Palafox, of the Mexican army team, tonight repeated his 1938 triumph in the international military special challenge trophy by riding a perfect course on Aquila Blanca in the feature event of the Thursday night program at the Fifty-fourth National Horse Show.

His ride, best in a field of 28 army officers, was greeted with thunderous applause by a crowd of 10,000. He won the event last year on Azteca, but that horse refused the second jump tonight.

The event, open to all nations and all branches of the service, was the most colorful spectacle of the evening program and held the spotlight from such perennial crowd pleasers as Maj. Hiram E. Tuttle's exhibition of dressage and the caisson drill of the Fort Myer gray horse battalion.

The eight jumps comprising tonight's course are considered as stiff a test of horsemanship as the national offers.

Maryland 'Raid' On G. U. Campus Stopped by Police

Heavy forces of Washington police and members of the Georgetown University faculty early today nipped in the bud a projected raid by University of Maryland students on the Georgetown campus. In anticipation of their football game tomorrow, Georgetown students yesterday painted the Maryland terrapin blue and gray.

Two riot calls were sounded when it was learned five carloads of Maryland students were on their way to Washington from College Park. The attack finally developed at the Georgetown dental school in the 3900 block of Reservoir road, where police of the Seventh Precinct rounded up all automobiles that seemed to carry suspicious occupants.

Jimmy German, Redskin's Rookie Star, to Face Dodgers

Ace Parker Chief Worry Of Flaherty

Locals Fear Parker, Brooklyn's One-Man Team, in Game On Road Sunday

Jimmy German, Redskins' rookie back who sat out the team's last two games, will return to action on Sunday against the Brooklyn Dodgers, Coach Ray Flaherty announced yesterday

Young German, who captured the fancy of Washington fans with his running and passing against the Dodgers and Pirates in early season games, was not mysteriously missing from the recent games against the Packers and Eagles, explained Flaherty.

"There was nothing mysterious about his absence," said the Redskins' coach. "German is a valuable ball carrier on a dry field. On a wet field, he is not so valuable. He doesn't have the power and drive that a wet field requires. He's a fast, precision runner and a wet gridiron wrecks that kind.

Absence Not Demotion

"His absence from our last two games wasn't any demotion for German. Given a dry field at Brooklyn, he'll see plenty of action and I expect him to do us a lot of good."

The Redskins' chief concern is not their own attack which has been functioning satisfactorily, but their defense against the depredations of Ace Parker, Brooklyn's one-man team.

Parker is feared for his ball-carrying, his passing and his kicking. Flaherty noted an improvement in the Redskins' defense last week with the shift of Guard Jim Karcher to the backer-up position and the transfer of Mickey Parks to the line on defense, and will hold to those tactics.

Locals Hold Edge

The season's figures show the Redskins to have a pronounced edge over the Dodgers. The Washington team boasts a better average in first downs, yards gained rushing, passing efficiency, punt run-backs, fumbles recovered, points scored and yards yielded on defense. Brooklyn has a better average in punting and has made fewer fumbles.

"We can't depend on past figures, though," said Flaherty. "Brooklyn is an improved ball team. I saw them mop up the Pirates whom we had a tough time licking. As far as I'm concerned, this can be our toughest ball game of the season. Any team that can hold the Giants to a 7-6 score can't be underrated."

A.A.U. Boxing Group Urges Quick Entries

A special meeting of the organization committee of the annual D. C. A. A. U. championship boxing tournament last night urged all prospective entries to register immediately. A much more rigid physical examination than ever before confronts the entrants and the committee warned that the longer the delay in entering, the less chance the entrant will have to be accepted.

Entries are being received by John Jankowski, director of athletics at the Boys Club of Washington, central branch. The deadline is 8 p. m. Wednesday evening.

Although there is a disappointing number of unattached entries to date, the committee announced that the various boys clubs of Washington and Virginia are planning to send large representations. National Guard and Fort Myer, which tied for the team title last year, will both have strong teams. A third leading contender for team honors is expected to be St. Mary's Boys Club of Alexandria, which celebrates its first boxing anniversary this month. St. Mary's has announced it will have 34 color bearers in the tournament. That would be a record entry by a single club.

Already there is a great deal of interest in the heavpweight class. Chester Morris, stablemate of Jimmy DeChard, is the defending champion. He is conceded no more than an even chance to hold the crown, however, for DeChard and Leon Miller, Fort Myer husky, will be gunning for him.

The A. A. U. tournament will begin Friday and run for five consecutive weeks.

Tulsa U. Star Dropped Because of Marriage

Tulsa, Okla., Nov. 9 (AP).—C. B. Stanley, sophomore tackle, was dropped from the Tulsa University football squad today. Head Coach Chet Benefiel explained that Stanley's secret marriage of last August, just disclosed, was the cause.

An athletic department rule prohibits married men from playing football. Stanley's bride, the former Betty Roberts, also a student, said Stanley had intended to drop out of school next week.

Army, in Good Shape, Leaves For Cambridge

No Change in Starting Line-up Expected for Harvard Contest

Special Dispatch to The Post.

West Point, N. Y., Nov. 9.—Army's football squad left here this afternoon by train, enroute for Cambridge, Mass., where they will meet Harvard on Saturday afternoon, on Soldiers' Field in the twenty-fifth match of their series, which commenced in 1895.

The squad of 36 men is in good physical condition after its gruelling match with Notre Dame last Saturday, and will present a lineup which is itching to win its first major game. Coach Wood intends to make no change in the starting lineup which faced the Fighting Irish.

The majority of the team which took victory from the grasp of the Cantabs last fall in the closing minutes of the game, will not be present, Woodrow Wilson, Huey Long, Jim Schwenk, backfield stars, all being among the missing. However, the present backfield, sparked by Art Frontczak, quarterback, and brilliant runner of last year's match, includes a foursome which showed its ability last Saturday by making the longest drive of the day, and with the experience it attained cannot be considered lightly.

Terror Loses Second Half Of His Mat Double-Header

The Golden Terror took it upon himself to challenge two opponents in the feature bouts last night at Turner's Arena before 1,200 fans, and emerged with only a .500 per cent average.

John Katan, his first opponent stayed with the hooded man 15 minutes before being counted out by Referee Berger. Immediately after this affair was over Little Abie Coleman, who is only half the size of the Terror, jumped through the rope with a two-point landing on the Terror's jaw with his feet, and held him for the necessary count of three. It took only a half minute for Abie to pin his oversized opponent.

The Terror was thrown all over the ring by Katan and Coleman landed an extra punch on the Terror's body whenever he got close enough to land without having to enter the ring.

At one time when Abie was about to strike, the Terror threatened to come out of the ring and mix a few blows with his next opponent. The crowd was anxious for Abie to get his chance to mix it up with the Terror and their wish came true.

The Terror immediately threw Katan and then took on his second foe, but with very little success.

The next best bout on the card was between Joe Campbell and LaFarino, with Campbell nailing his opponent in 16½ minutes with body press. These two boys knew more holds and were able to release themselves from all types of grips.

Rudy Strongberg, who met Don Evans in the semifinal bout of the evening, wrestled to a 30-minute draw. Joe Turner announced that Strongberg and Evans will wrestle on the feature bout with no time limit next week.

Jack Hader and Stanley Pinto also drew and Whitey Gorve defeated Pete Beltram with a body press in 21 minutes.

Navy in Full Length Drill for Columbia

Dave Wolfe to Replace Al Feldmier At Guard for Game in Annapolis; 'B' Teams, Frosh, Soccer Squads All Active

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 9.—The last full-length practice session before Navy's meeting with Columbia here Saturday, was devoted this afternoon entirely to the offensive. The revamped backfield, consisting of Monty Whitehead, Tom Blount, Sammy Boothe and Pat Gray, wso given a thorough drill in the attack formations to be used against the Lions.

Al Feldmeirer, Navy guard, who has shown the best offensive work so far this season, will be unable to play, but Dave Wolfe, who was first-choice in the position last year, and who weighs 195 pounds to Feldmeier's 183, will be in his place.

The rest of the line will be as it has appeared in practice this week, with the light, but peppery Dick Foster, and the veteran Lou Burke at the ends; Capt. Al Bergner and Bex Trimble at the tackles, Joe Sliwka at left gaurd and Bill Sims, formerly regular center at Georgia Tech, at that position.

Line to Be Heavier

All the changes in the line have brought about extra weight, and though the average is much below the 205-pounds of early season, the drop is largely due to the substitution of 165-pound Dick Foster for 230-pound Harold Hanson at left end. The starting line now averages 193 pounds.

In the final lineup, Sammy Boothe and Joe Sliwka are sophomores, while Foster, Sims and Wolfe have been slightly used reserves, while Bex Trimble has just been switched from guard to tackle.

Winter sports will reach their local apex this week, with the game against Columbia, the last varsity contest at Annapolis, as the high point. Tomorrow, the unbeaten Navy B squad plays its third game against Penn State B's and on Saturday morning an interesting and varied program will be presented.

Football between the plebes and Hun School, whose team was the only one to win from the plebes last year, is the high point on the card. Other events are soccer between the Navy varsity and Dartmouth and between the plebes and Patterson Park High, of Baltimore, and a cross-country match between the plebes and Mercersburg.

Columbia Leaves For Annapolis Today

New York, Nov. 9.—Confident that they can break the five-year jinx and "sink the Navy," a squad of 36 Columbia football players headed by Capt. Frank Stulgaitis and Coach Lou Little will leave tomorrow afternoon for Baltimore.

The squad is scheduled to put in a short tuning-up practice at Baker Field before heading for the 5:30 train from the station. Students on Morningside Heights are planning a monster sendoff at the station.

The Lions will arrive at Baltimore at 8:30 p. m., leaving at 10 a. m. Saturday for Annapolis.

"Navy, with Emmett Wood back, will unquestionably be the best Navy team of the season," said Lou Little. "This has been a good Navy team defensively throughout the season, as witness the low scores of the opposition, including the scoreless tie with Dartmouth.

"Wood's return will bolster the offense tremendously and we're expecting a contest fully as tough as that with Cornell last week."

Chicago Grads Fear 'Ouster' From Big 10

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Unless the alumni of the University of Chicago "do something immediately" about the consistently poor showing of the school in football, "the university will be asked to get out of the Big Ten," John J. Schommer told Maroon alumni of Chicago at their annual fall meeting today.

Chicago has been decisively defeated in its last three games.

Schommer, Big Ten football official and one-time gridiron star at Chicago, said:

"It isn't the coaches' fault, nor is it the fault of the president (Robert M. Hutchins). It's our fault and unless we do something about it immediately the university will be asked to get out of the Big Ten.

"You can't expect these teams to play here and leave with $1,000 or so when they can play almost any other opponent and get $25,000 or $30,000. Football is big business. It pays for other athletic facilities, intramural programs, stadiums and hundreds of things, and unless our alumni keep pace we'll be forced out."

John W. Chapman, secretary-treasurer of the Chicago Alumni Association, said there were numerous ways of inducing high school athletes to attend Chicago without subsidization.

Tulsa U. Alumni Want Coach Retained

Tulsa, Okla., Nov. 9 (AP).—Tulsa University Alumni sent to the university board of trustees today a letter commending Chet Benefiel, head football coach, and recommending his retention for another year.

Benefiel, former Hurricane gridiron star, is serving his first season as head coach on a one-year contract. His team, which includes a number of sophomores, has won three games and lost as many.

All-Canadian Line-up to Play For Eagles Six

Washington Hockey Team Releases One Player, Signs Another

An all-Canadian line-up will represent the Washington Eagles when they make their Eastern Ice Hockey League debut against the Atlantic City Sea Gulls at Atlantic City Friday night, November 17.

Severine G. Loeffler, owner of the Eagle franchise and of Riverside Stadium, yesterday announced that Ty Anderson, defense man of the Eagles and the only American born player on the team, has received his unconditional release upon request.

Simultaneously Leoffler announced the signing of Les Colvin, a goaler and a native of Oshawa, Canada. Colvin last season was associated with the Oshawa Generals, who won the Canadian junior championship, and is considered one of the most promising players in Montreal and vicinity.

The signing of Len Burrage, star defense man and a native Canadian, offsets the loss of Anderson. Burrage now is attempting to book passage to the United States from London.

The Eagles tonight are to conclude their exhibition series against Queen's College in Kingston, Ontario.

Billy Banks to Box On Phil Furr Card

The supporting bout for next Monday's arena feature between Phil Furr and Frankie Wills was announced yesterday. Billy Banks, local colored featherweight, will meet Humphrey Stanard, of Engleside, N. J., in a six-round semifinal. Stanard is a former Golden Glove champion of the State.

Billy Bullock and Ray Ingram started serious training yesterday for their part of the card, that will find Bullock after his second victory in as many weeks.

Vic Finazzo Loses Decision to Mecadon

Baltimore, Nov. 9 (U.P.).—Jay Mecadon, of Newark, N. J., decisioned Vic Finazzo, of Baltimore, in the eight-round feature on tonight's boxing card here.

Mecadon, at 148, pressed the fight all the way and sent Finazzo down for no-count in the fifth. Finazzo also weighed 148.

Frank's Tavern held the loop lead with two victories over Kavaka's Grill. Other high scores included a 369 set by Fred Newman and 353 for Frank Carter.

ARCADIA

Gus Mangese, of Castles, had a 152 game and led the team to top game of 623 in the War Department League at Arcadia. Harry Penfold, of Adjutants, had a 383 set, and Lithos top team set of 1,734.

Jean Jackley and Peggy Milton led the Veterans' Administration League girls at Arcadia with a 124 game and 320 set, respectively, while the team totals included a 497 game and 1,401 set for Dependents Claims.

RECREATION

Garfinckle's broke the first-place tie in the Department Store League at Recreation by blanking Raleigh Haberdasher. Kann's and Woodward & Lothrop were tied for second, as Irwkin Simon's 370 featured the former's odd-game triumph over Hecht's. Irving Bowman had 369 and Bill Kingsolver 355 as Lansburgh's won two, while Credit Bureau won the odd one over Jelleff's.

Robby's Menswear Paddlers in Lead

Robby's Menswear paddlers surged into a two-game lead last night in District "A" League Table Tennis competition at the Chevy Chase Ice Palace, defeating Palace Florists, 8-3. Wesley Heights' 10-1 triumph over the Federals earned second place in the standings as R.-J. Milk Bar, erstwhile leader, won only 7 of its 11 matches with Wesson Oil. Les Canadiens Spoil Giants' Opener by 2-0

Montreal Hockey Team Rallies in 2 Final Sessions; 5,000 Fans

By International News Service.

Montreal, Nov. 9.—Les Canadiens took the edge off the New York Americans starting game by blanketing the invaders, 2-0, for their second straight National Hockey League victory before a crowd of some 5,000 fans here tonight.

Last team in the loop to start play, the Amerks played a hard but losing game. Although they held their own during the scoreless opening period, the Montrealers crowded them hard in the two final sessions.

Although the flying Frenchmen forced the play in the invaders' territory during most of the middle frame it was not until the last six minutes of the period that Defenseman Doug Young picked up a stray pass from a dog fight in the American nets and whipped it past Goalie Earl Robertson for Montreal's first tally. Robinson and Getliffe were credited with assists on the play.

The final period was in many respects a repetition of the second. Although Amerks turned on a strong offensive with the Anderson-Armstrong-Wiseman line breaking through for a shot at the Canadien nets, Goalie Claude Bourque managed to boot out their best.

In the final three minutes of play, Charlie Sands combined with Blake and Haynes to beat Earl Robertson for the habitants second tally. A penalty shot was awarded Amerks in the opening period, when Young tripped Murray. Charlie Conacher's hard drive to the left corner, however, was off by a few feet and it failed to register.

Eastern, Western Clash Today in Crucial Series Game

Anacostia, Roosevelt Also Meet

Wilson, Central Play in Other Tilt: St. Alban's To Face Landon

On the short end of the odds, but as confident as an underdog can safely be, Eastern High's football forces make their most important start of the current interhigh season today when they square off with Western at the latter's stadium at 3:15.

Both elevens will be seeking public school superiority which neither has owned very often. Only three times in 47 years of campaigning has Eastern won an interhigh title, and Western still seeks its first uncontested crown.

Also on the card for the day are games between Anacostia and Roosevelt at Eastern Stadium, and Wilson and Central at Central Stadium. Both start at 3:15, as does the prep school clash between Landon and St. Alban's on the Saint gridiron.

Must Win to Stay In Race

No one realizes more fully how much the Eastern-Western fracas means than Coach Mike Kelly, Eastern's guide. If he wins, he says, taking Central's feared machine apart a little later will be simple as anything. If he loses—well, he's resigned to another year of finishing down the list in the final standings. Any club that can't beat Western, Central's prime rival in the west section, can hardly beat the defending champions, he thinks.

Western, co-leader of the west section of the series, will also have its mind on Central in today's game. The 1938 winners appear to have a set-up in Woodrow Wilson, a victory over which would give them three victories. Western must turn back Eastern, then, to stay in the race. Considerable will also hinge on Anacostia's outing against Roosevelt, the Indians holding second in the east division a scant game behind the leading Easterners. They must win and hope for a relapse by the Lincoln Parkers to push the division into a playoff.

The winners? Each coach hopefully predicts a victory for his assortment of youngsters, with the possible exception of Carl Heintel at Wilson. His green-clad mites are the only team without a chance to win. Against Central their only hope will be to keep the score down, and Coach Heintel knows it.

Western Favored

On the basis of past performances, Western likewise appears to have a wide margin over Eastern. The Raider backfield combination of Hilleary, Barnes, Snow and Herrlein has tasted defeat but once this season, while Eastern was absorbing defeats before Episcopal, Washington-Lee and Gonzaga.

On the strength of improvement, however, Eastern deserves recognition. After its disastrous start it has come back to whip Wilson, Anacostia and John Marshall High, of Richmond, by comfortable scores. Western, on the other hand, has approximately the same team, with the same ability with which it began its season. Hunch players will take Eastern, providing Soo, Hallama, Cohill, Teague and Yokum are in perfect shape.

Roosevelt still is victoryless, in outside games as well as in the interhigh series. It's scored exactly six points in five games. But it has the power and talent to beat Anacostia. Coach Rolland Lund's Little Indian squad is just that—little. It boasts at the outside 14 capable performers, and that's all. In that one, then, the choice is Roosevelt to finally win a game.

Chevy Chase Dog Winner

By the Associated Press

Luray, Va., Nov. 9.—Betsy of Carodoc, a setter owned by William Harper, of Chevy Chase, won the Members Derby of the Page County Field Trial Club's thirty-fourth annual meeting today. Second was Jodoe of Bedford, a pointer belonging to W. Glenn Pearce, of Medford, N. J.

Florendale Spider, a setter owned by Contee Adams, of Hamilton, Va., captured the Members All-Age Stake this afternoon and will receive the silver trophy given by G. F. Pollock, association president. Florendale Spider ran wide and proved steady to shot and wing.

The fall trials began this morning in ideal weather on the A. G. Miller Horse Show grounds at Washington, Va. Dr. George Long, executive secretary, said the number of entries was smaller than usual and that the four stakes probably could be finished tomorrow.

Virginia Harriers Retain Big 6 Title With V.M.I. Second

By the Associated Press

Charlottesville, Nov. 9.—The University of Virginia retained the "Big Six" cross country title today, but Washington and Lee's Mike Crocker won individual honors by finishing first in the fast time of 21 minutes 12.5 seconds.

Virginia runners scored 36 points, V. M. I. 63, Washington and Lee 73, the University of Richmond 88, William and Mary 114 and Virginia Tech 118.

Chewning, of V. M. I., placed second followed by three Cavalier runners, Charles Chamberlain, Beverly Tucker and Ed Holm, in that order.

William and Mary walked away with the freshman meet with a low score of six, with Virginia Tech, V. M. I., Washington and Lee and Virginia following. Thomas, of William and Mary, crossed the line first.

On Hunting

Old Jupe Pluvious drowned out the turkey shoot of the Bethesda Ikes last Sunday, but, like a seed in the spring, it will sprout into a two-day affair this week-end. Same place—just a mile beyond the bank on the Rockville pike, and any time after 9 a. m. Saturday morning until dark on Sunday.

ACKERMAN

Bill Leetch's stocking crew have finished planting the 7,500 browns in the upper stretches of Rock Creek. These trout, obtained from the Federal hatchery at Leestown, W. Va., by Frank Bentz, chief clerk of the Maryland commission, averaged between 3 and 5 inches, although many were close to 6 inches in length. They were released in the Main Fork from Avery to Muncasters Mill. The North Fork was stocked above the weir with identical trout by Rockville Waltonians.

This planting will supply little sport during the season of 1940. In fact, anglers would further their fun by laying off this water until the following season, when the going should be something to talk about.

Plenty of Fishing

Deep and narrow, and heavily wooded with the exception of one stretch of meadowland below Redlands, there are more then 20 miles of trouting water, that with judicious use will supply good fishing for Washington and Maryland anglers. Summer temperatures seldom exceed 68 degrees, which healthy trout of any species can take with little trouble.

Frank Delaney is taking over this work for Bethesda Chapter for the coming year, with Willard Barnsley, W. E. Killingsworth and Bill Leetch to assist.

Noting Killingsworth stocking small fish brings to mind the fact he's just as good at taking the big ones out—with rod and reel.

Fishing the salt ponds along the banks of the Wicomico in southern Maryland this past week with Earl Milwick, the two top fish in their creels were pike weighing nearly 6 pounds each. Bettering by more than a pound the best we heard of in the Severn during the past ten days. The 4 pound 9 ounce pike caught by Jim Zimmerman, of Severn Park.

Any bass received from the Maryland commission this fall will be stocked by Delaney and his crew in the Seneca watershed. The heaviest plantings will go to Little Seneca and Wildcat Creeks.

There is little wonder why local hunters do considerable shooting in Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The first noted, above any State in the Union for conservation and game stocking and the latter pushing ahead on the same lines until it too, is today among the top ten.

During the last fiscal year New Jersey liberated 36,824 pheasants, 29,996 rabbits, 9,701 quail, 931 of the up and coming chukor partridges and 161 mallard ducks.

Of the pheasants liberated, 23,986 were propagated on State game farms, 7,224 were purchased from dealers for releasing on open State lands and 5,634 from the public shooting and fishing grounds fund for liberation on State-controlled areas open to the public for hunting.

The mallards were raised at the Rockport Game Farm, the chukors and quail on the State quail farm, although 2,358 bobwhite were purchased for liberation on open lands.

Season Opens Today

Last year in New Jersey hunters took game to the value of $1,462,435, which included 2,339 deer, 109,518 pheasants, 41,297 quail, 675,706 rabbits, 8,294 grouse, 11,337 woodcock and 39,200 ducks.

The season opens today and closes on December 15. Rabbits, hares, quail, male ringneck pheasants, ruffled grouse and squirrels will be in season. The taking of female pheasants is still prohibited.

Daily bag limits include 10 quail (several counties in the northern part of the State have no open season this year), 6 rabbits, 6 gray squirrels, 3 ruffled grouse and 2 male pheasants (30-in season).

During the past two years world's angling records have fallen like rain. The last was that on Allison tuna, for women which has been on the books since 1924, and when it went by the board, it was topped twice with a few days.

Mrs. C. M. Cooke, of Honolulu, broke it the first time with a fish weighing 183 pounds which topped the old record held by Mrs. Keith Spalding by 11 pounds.

"Skippy" Doheny boated one weighing 186 pounds several days later off Waianaea, 20 miles from Honolulu.

taken to Loew's Capitol Theater, there to join the University of Maryland gridmen as guests of the management at the last performance of the evening. The Georgetown Band and a quartet of singers from the Maryland Glee Club appeared on the stage in conjunction with the regular vaudeville show.

Although the Georgetown eleven, undefeated and tied only once during the past two seasons, will rule a near prohibitive favorite to whip the Terrapins in the sixth renewal of their modern series, its supporters to a man expect a hard-fought game.

Each Georgetown player who stepped up on the porch of Old North was quick to warn the hilarious students that the team was anything but overconfident. Rather it was looking forward to a real battle, such as Maryland has offered Georgetown in the past when its chances of victory were just as dim.

Matuza, Ostinato Speak

Al Matuza, center, and Mark Ostinato, guard, were two of the gridmen who spoke and each recalled last year's bitterly contested game in which a heavily favored Georgetown club was pressed to beat the Terps, 14-7, after Joe Mellendeck, its outstanding halfback, was injured and removed from the game early in the first quarter.

Homecoming activities continue tonight with a smoker at the Mayflower Hotel at 8 o'clock for graduates of all branches of the University, and a special football broadcast over WOL, between 9:30 and 10. Among the speakers on this program will be Francis Beamer and Francis Daly, football captains of Maryland and Georgetown, respectively, and Harry Crowley, veteran Georgetown trainer.

Last event of the night will be the big homecoming dance at 10 o'clock at the Washington Hotel. The dance is sponsored by the Hoya, official student publication, which is anticipating a record attendance as old grads continue to pour into the city from all parts of the East.

Bill Carson Reaches Finals In Public Links Turkey Play

Anacostia Player Leads Field Shooting Over Three Capital Golf Layouts

The former Anacostia pro advanced to the finals of the championship flight over the southeast course, with a victory over Jump Hazelton, and will meet the winner of the W. W. Seay-Larry Byers match for the title. Winners and finalists in all flights win turkeys.

At Rock Creek it'll be Albert (Kaiser) Wilhelm against T. J. Meaney and R. L. Scarborough vs. E. A. Johnson in the first flight semifinals.

A. L. Thomas and Dr. C. R. Naples advanced to the round of four in the second flight, with Joe Hayes and Tony Suess. William Kelley and J. C. Bibb are third-flight finalists.

Harry Miller and Johnny Andestead will meet for a final round berth in the championship flight at East Potomac, while P. R. (Lefty) Phenix is waiting the outcome of the B. C. Brown-L. S. Pound match for his semifinal opponent.

The second-flight semifinal round finds Gorman Phillips meeting E. A. Anderson and J. S. Bailey opposing Dillon Turney. The four players who have waded through two matches in the third 16 include G. D. Livermore and D. N. Hevener, and C. Irvin and R. H. Kirchmyer. Bob Hendrickson is already in the fourth flight finals, waiting the outcome of the Mrs. Grace Long and J. Cassels match.

Public Links Team Play-off Sunday

The public links team rivalry should be settled once and for all Sunday when Tom Doerer's East Potomac team visits Anacostia to settle the "feud." Both claim superiority over Rock Creek after a series of matches, and they have split even in there matches so far, necessitating a play-off.

Entries close November 16 for the 36-hole Women's Public Links Championship at East Potomac. The tourney is set for East Potomac November 18 and 19, 18 holes a day, with trophies for the winner and runner-up now on display at the public links clubhouses.

Mary Elchepp, Shorey Win Silver Trophy

Mel Shorey, East Potomac professional, and Mary Elchepp, of the Ice Follies, won the silver trophy as members of the Follies cast and the golf pros got together yesterday at East Potomac.

Miss Elchepp didn't help her partner, but Shorey's 73 was the best round of the day, and topped all the best-ball scores. Many of the girls were unable to finish the round. Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam pro, had a 75, second best round. Other pros who competed included Rut Coffey, Al Jamison, Lewis Worsham, Tommy Doerer, Al Price, Tony Sylvester and T. Gilbraski.

Miss Elchepp received the trophy in an official presentation at the show last night at Riverside Stadium.

New York, Nov. 9.—The secrecy of the ballot is all that keeps one New Yorker from being acclaimed the No. 1 Brooklyn Dodger fan. He voted the entire Dodger roster for the City Council last Tuesday. Four others, it was shown in the slow count today, wrote in as their first choice for councilman Leo (Lippy) Durcher, the Dodgers' manager-shortstop.

Howard, Noted Sportsman, Buys Victory Morn for $21,600

2-Year-Old On Block At Pimlico

Trainer Earl Sande To Pont Former Ral Parr Ace for Derby Next Year

By a Staff Correspondent.

Pimlico Race Track, Nov. 9.—Victory Morn, star of the dispersal sale of horses owned by the late Ral Parr, was purchased by Maxwell Howard, Dayton, Ohio, paper manufacturer for $21,600 here today. The auctioneer's hammer fell after some 15 minutes of spirited bidding for the 2-year-old son of Challenger II and Bright Luna, winner of six races this year and $31,290 in purse money.

Trainer Earl Sande, conditioner for Howard, phoned the owner after the sale and it was decided to scratch Victory Morn out of today's $2,500 added Sagamore Handicap. "The colt has been standing around all morning and doubtless is excited. Mr. Howard said that under the circumstances it was better to keep him in the barn this afternoon," said Sande.

Howard is the owner of Stagehand, winner of the $100,000 added Santa Anita Handicap and the $50,000 added Santa Anita Derby. Other prominent horses in his barn are Sceneshifter and The Chief.

Despite his lack of heft, Victory Morn is considered a formidable candidate for the 1940 Kentucky Derby, and it is believed that Trainer Sande will ease up on him for the remainder of the year with view to pointing him for the Blue Grass classic.

The second highest price of the Parr sale was the $6,500 paid for Maestro Sascha, a 2-year-old which had worked extremely fast for Trainer H. G. Bedwell, but was cut down in a stake race in New England and was retired for the remainder of the year at the beginning of the Maryland fall season.

The complete summary of the vendue follows:

Horse and Buyer.	Price.
Victory Morn, Maxwell Howard	$21,600
Maestro Sascha, W. duPont, jr.	6,500

Wheat Prices Decline With Kansas Rains

Closings Are at Lows For Day With Other Grains Also Down

Special Dispatch to The Post

Chicago, Nov. 9.—Rains that sprinkled some on Kansas' richest wheat producing land, though apparently light, proved sufficient to touch off a burst of selling in the wheat pit today.

Prices dropped as much as 1⅞ cent at one stage and closed at or near the day's lows. Weakness of securities also added to the selling burden.

Partial reports indicated rain was received at several points particularly in central and southern Kansas. However, crop experts said that unless more moisture in larger quantities is forthcoming little or no benefit could be received by weakened wheat plants.

Wheat closed 1¼-1¾ lower than yesterday, December 87-86⅞, May 85⅜-85¼; corn ⅜-⅝ down, December 50⅛-50. May 52¾-52¼; oats ⅛-⅜ lower; rye ⅜-¾ off; soy beans 1¾-2 own and lard 2 to 5 lower.

Cotton Futures Continue Climb To Higher Levels

New York, Nov. 9 (AP).—Cotton futures moved forward under full sail today. Despite hedging sales and profit taking attracted by higher prices, the final range was unchanged to 15 points up.

Not only did buyers find cheering news in a fast rally at Liverpool, but also in reports from Washington that Department of Agriculture officials expected the new loan program to create a "squeeze" in the spot cotton supply situation by next spring.

Early demand focused on nearby contracts, at least some of which was believed to represent lifting of hedges against sales of lint abroad. In this connection Manchester buyers are said to be covering supplies to assure mill operations well into next year. Bombay inquiry was also vigorous due to narrowing differences between the local and Indian markets.

'Hoya Gang Has Been Out Here Again,' Irate Students Claim as Guards Are Posted At Shrine Until Football Game Tomorrow

New York, Nov. 8.—The irregular downward trend which the stock market has maintained for the last few weeks took on sharper characteristics today particularly in the last hour when stop-loss orders were uncovered and the ticker was too burdened with business to keep pace with transactions. Trading was about 1,200,000 shares and the composite average recorded a net loss of 0.62, with most stocks closing at or near their porrest of the session. Aviations were hardest hit and the steels were a good second. Rails, equipments, motors and metals also were under heavy pressure.

A break in sterling and the biggest shake-up in foreign currencies since the outbreak of the war was a disturbing influence. Increased tension between Germany on the one hand and Holland and Belgium on the other brought about another flight of European funds to this country. The belga reached a new low and the guilder was under pressure, but due to official support it closed up ½ cent. Sterling swung over a wide range between $3.89½ and $3.87½, closing at $3.84, off 7 cents.

Charts Point Lower

The tendency of junior securities was similar to that of the foreign currencies, with the war and the doubts it raises as to trade possibilities for American companies furnishing the bearish influence. The break today makes the secondary trend on the charts downward.

Leadership had been poor in the stock list for several days. The one advance of the last two weeks caused a wave of speculation in the cheaper class of stocks. These issues led the list day after day and the more seasoned leaders displayed heaviness.

This is frequently a sign of underlying weakness for it often indicates that the better informed insiders are lightening their long lines while too many traders of the general public are taking on cheap stocks on the fallacious theory that when they are low they can't go much lower.

Business At High Level

Business indices indicate that operations in major lines are still holding at a high level. The street is more interested, however, in guessing the possible duration of the present high level of trade than in the actual figures of performances of the recent past.

The early hours today gave no clew of the break that was to develop. Leading issues were firm to higher. Small gains were made early in the steels, with the exception of Republic. Minor advances were made in rails, coppers and utilities around noon.

The selling developed in the afternoon and foreign reports indicated that the increased tension between Germany and two neighboring neutrals. With the list honeycombed with stop-loss orders, further liquidation was soon touched off. Chrysler held a small gain but a long list of the old line leaders showed losses of 1 to 2 points.

Curtiss-Wright was the most active stock, followed by Continental Motors and Aviation Corporation, off fractions. Steel was off 1⅝ and Bethlehem, ex-dividend, was down nearly 2. Republic dropped 2. Other losses of 1 to 2 points included Allied Chemical, Smelting, C. & O., Commonwealth & Southern preferred, Harvester, Manville, Central, Sears and Union Pacific.

The loss for wheat for the day was 1¼ to 1¾ cents a bushel, on the rains in Kansas and sympathetic selling with the securities. Cotton advanced 7 to 15 points following demand in Liverpool.

Prime Bonds Firm

High-grade investment bonds marked time today in the listed market, while most issues with a speculative tinge drifted lower. United States Treasury issues were raised in the formal trading to the levels established late Wednesday over the counter. Speculative corporate securities were lower, with only a few noteworthy exceptions. Foreign dollar issues proved uncertain. Turnover amounted to $8,200,000, par value.

Although they were notified late the previous day that ordinary "positions" could be resumed in treasury issues, dealers in these bonds preferred to remain on the sidelines. Small gains were recorded in the formal activity, but at the 4 p. m. deadline of the counter market, quotations for long-term treasury bonds were virtually unchanged, as against those of 24 hours earlier. Nor were the guaranteed issues in better demand.

Small fractional gains outnumbered the losses in best rated utility, railroad and industrial bonds. Among speculative rails the sleepy downward drift of previous sessions was continued, but Boston & Maine bonds again advanced sharply in response to the plan of Jesse Jones for financial readjustment of the line. Holding company and share privilege bonds attracted little interest.

European neutral dollar bonds displayed the nervousness now current about the ability of the countries to remain aloof from the conflict. Australian bonds receded, but Canadians were firm. In the Latin-American group only a few issues were in demand, for confidence is waning in the ability of the Administration to obtain legislation for extensive foreign boondoggling.

For the short period just ended clearings dropped $764,774,000 below the amount recorded for the previous full week. A like comparison for the two similar weeks of 1938, however, revealed a much greater decrease, amounting to $1,620,014,000.

G. U. Freshmen 5-2 Favorites Over Maryland

Cubs, 21-6, and by Washington and Lee's frosh, 33-6, while the Little Hoyas had beaten Temple Frosh, and William and Mary Varsity, Norfolk division.

Coach Al Woods, of the Little Terps, said yesterday he could see but scant chance of his lightweight youngsters—none of whom weighs more than 187 pounds—defeating the club that is called by some as the Hilltop's greatest frosh eleven.

The Terps, however, are fired up for a winning effort and are reported considerably improved over their early season form. Observers feel that Maryland will be in the game as long as the regulars are able to keep going at top speed. After that Georgetown's superior reserves probably will be the deciding factor, they say, just as they were against George Washington's yearlings.

oday's game will be the fans' last opportunity this season of glimpsing Georgetown's great backfield of Barrett, Ford, McLaughlin and Kull, which will start, and Doolan, a climax runner, who is expected to see plenty of action. Doolan reeled off a long run for a touchdown against G. W. and was dangerous every time he was shaken loose, because of his exceptional speed. He is a former national interscholastic 60-yard sprint champion and is said to be able to run the 100 consistently in 10 flat.

Another outstanding Georgetown player will be Chris Pavich, whom Varsity Coach Jack Hagerty considers one of the finest end prospects ever to enroll at the Hilltop. Although Pavich weighs only 170 pounds, he is so quick on his feet and such a clever player that seldom does an enemy back gain through his territory. Covering punts also is a speciality with Pavich.

Maryland's best backfield bet is reported to be Joe Hoopsengardner, a lefty halfback, from Hagerstown, Md. The Terps also have a good ball carrier in Lou Checas whose name is almost the same as Lou Ghecas, crack halfback of the Georgetown varsity.

The probable starting lineups:

Geo. Frosh.	Position.	Md. Frosh
Pavich	L.E.	MacDonald
Parpich	L.T.	Eckman
Munter	L.G.	Sansone
Erickson	Center	Ruppersberger
Cerasaro	R.G.	Maxson
Jaworowski	R.T.	DePrimo
Foman	R.E.	Seward
Barrett	Q.B.	Hoopengardner
Ford	L.H.	Campbell
McLaughlin	R.H.	Gilmore
Kull	F.B.	Gunther

Virginia Frosh Humble Tarheels

way the third period. Starting on their own 45-yard line they marched to Virginia's 15-yard stripe, Sigler then shot a long pass to Rothey, who snagged the ball in the end zone as it was deflected by Daly. Sigler's placement was good.

Daly Runs 15 Yards

The winning touchdown in the final period was almost as spectacular as the first registered by the Cavaliers. With the ball on Virginia's 35-yard line and first down, Daly circled right end and raced 65 yards to score, outdistancing all of his pursuers. Creighton again booted the ball between the uprights for the extra point.

"Yes, it's Smoother Today"
Rex Beach

WE ASKED REX BEACH, author of 20 best-sellers, and a judge of fine whiskey, to compare Seagram's 1934 Crowns with Seagram's 1939 Crowns. His verdict: "I've never tasted whiskey as smooth as your present Seagram's. You're right, it's 'America's Finest'."

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS are invested year after year to make Seagram's Crown Whiskies constantly finer, smoother, mellower. Step up, you can actually taste the difference. Try the milder 5 Crown—the richer 7 Crown. Say Seagram's—and be sure!

U. S. Eases Ban On Travel to 4 Neutral States

Persons 'With Good Reasons' Get Visas Under New Policy

The State Department has relaxed its ban on Americans traveling to neutral nations in southern Europe, officials said yesterday.

While travel to Europe is still discouraged, individuals "with good reasons" to visit Spain, Portugal, Italy and Switzerland may go, it was said. At the start of the war, all passports were canceled and since then only persons whose presence in Europe was "imperatively necessary" were allowed to go.

This policy continues as to neutral nations other than those named. It is interpreted from a national rather than individual point of view, it was said. Travel to belligerent nations is prohibited by the new neutrality law, except in rare circumstances.

A number of Americans who have maintained homes in the four neutral nations are being issued visas to return and the families of foreign service and other Government personnel stationed there are being permitted to sail.

Mrs. Charles E. Courtney, of Washington, wife of Rear Admiral Courtney, commander of the United States European squadron, sailed Wednesday on the Italian liner Vulcania. She will join her husband at Lisbon, where the squadron is now based.

She told the Associated Press in New York before sailing that she had been trying to secure a passport since early last month, but had been put off by the State Department.

Castiglioni was hurled by the impact into a 4-foot hole several feet away. He died at Emergency Hospital.

Nathan Barker, 26, of Charles Town, W. Va., a concrete worker, suffered undetermined back injuries when he plunged 30 feet after a scaffold collapsed at the south end of the Key Bridge. He was taken to Georgetown Hospital.

Arlington Plea For Columbia Pike Renewed

County Officials Ask $113,000 Allotment Be Made Permanent

Special Dispatch to The Post

Richmond, Va., Nov. 9.—Six Arlington County officials appeared today before the Virginia State Highway Commission to urge that a tentative appropriation of $113,000 for widening Columbia pike through the county be made permanent.

F. Freeland Chew, chairman of the Arlington board of supervisors, and a spokesman for the delegation, asked that the road from U. S. Highway, No. 1, near Washington Airport to Glebe road, be widened to include three lanes. Frank C. Hanrahan, county manager, asked the commission to recommend sufficient funds to make the road four lanes wide. Both requests were taken under advisement.

Other delegations urging improvement on route 7 in northern Virginia and the Mathews-Gloucester highway were heard as the commission brought to a close the public discussion of the tentative allocations totaling $23,198,904 for highway construction next year.

The commission heard discussions here on the allocations for the Richmond, Fredericksburg, Suffolk and Culpeper districts. Hearings for the four western districts were held at Roanoke Wednesday.

During the day an eight-point program for improving highway facilities in The Peninsula area in 1940-41 was recommended to the State highway commission by a delegation from The Peninsula Association of Commerce.

G. Franklin Lenz, president of the association, in a prepared statement read to the commission at a public hearing on tentative allocations for next year, said that "through this body the people of the Virginia peninsula desire to remind your honorable body of the fact that there is an imperative need for the allocation of a substantial amout of funds in your 1940 budget for highway improvement on this peninsula."

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Jack Dreyfus young stock broker and amateur contract enthusiast, has developed a new playing convention which markedly simplifies the defenders' problems, particularly at no trump. He submitted his plan to the Four Aces, who after a cursory examination said, "It looks good."

Under the Dreyfus plan, defender plays the second highest cards of equals, rather than the lowest. With Q J 10 7, Dreyfus, in playing to his partners' lead, would put on the jack, not the ten, as under the present rule. Holding J 10 7 5, he would play the ten.

The advantage is that partner may learn through this signaling whether or not the suit is solid and whether or not he should play it straight out or wait for a lead through.

Today's Hand

North-South Vulnerable

SOUTH DEALER

♠ 10 7
♡ K Q 9 3
◇ K Q J 8 6

♠ J 5 3 2 — ♡ A J 2 — ◇ 2 — ♣ A 9 5 3 2

NORTH: ♠ K 8 4 ♡ 7 6 4 ◇ 9 7 4 ♣ Q J 10 4

SOUTH: ♠ A Q 9 6 ♡ 10 8 5 ◇ A 10 5 3 ♣ K 6

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
2 NT.	Pass	3 NT.	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 3 ♣

Today's hand, explained by the Aces, shows how a brilliant defensive player managed to defeat South's no-trump contract without the aid of the Dreyfus convention, but had he and his partner been using the young broker's signal his problem would have been simplified.

Here is the way they describe it:

"West's opening lead was the three of clubs. His partner played the ten and declarer the king. South now led a low heart, and West, after thinking things over very carefully, decided that the only way to beat the hand was to find his partner with both the queen and jack of clubs. Accordingly he went right up with the ace of hearts, led the deuce of clubs and set the hand. A very beautiful defensive play, which would have been considerably easier under the Dreyfus convention, since in that case East would have played the jack on the opening lead, and now West would have had to figure out that his partner held one card—not two.

"Furthermore, under the Dreyfus convention, if the ten had been played, West would have known his partner did not have the queen and would have waited in the hope that his partner would get on lead at some later stage."

Seasoned Timber

By Dorothy Canfield

Chapter 48

"HASN'T IT EVER happened, Canby, in the history of the world that people have put their principles before——"

"Oh, Uncle Tim, be yourself! This isn't history. This is now."

"That's just what we're a-goin' to find out, young man," said Mr. Dewey Warmly. "I may be all off, but this looks to me like history."

"Prof. Hulme, can I ask one question?"

"I should say so, Burt! This is your party, lots more than it is ours. You'll be here long after we older people have gone. What's your question?"

"Why, we don't hardly ever have any Jews as students, see? Just Jules, and those Hemmerling boys, and Rosie Steinburg, this year. Why couldn't they go somewhere else to school? Good gash, Prof. Hulme, it'd be cheaper to pay their expenses up in Ashley at the high school and get all that money for the 'cademy!" The boy drew a long breath of satisfaction. He had got it out at last where it could be heard, the simple, all-sufficient argument, which by some extraordinary absence of mind, nobody else had thought of. He waited, not to have it answered—how could it be answered?—but to have it acknowledged and this strange delusion ended.

Prof. Hulme asked him, "Burt, do you remember about that trouble over the tax on tea between England the American Colonies?"

"Why, yes sir."

"Well, it would have been cheaper for your great-grandparents, a great deal cheaper, to pay that tax—it wasn't much—than have the Revolution."

"Ha!" said Canby in an ironic imitation of Timothy, and dropped down on the cot.

The senior looked surprised. "I see what you mean, Prof. Hulme." He thought for a moment. "But honest—just t h i n k, n o w!—it wouldn't make a single bit of real difference—it's not as if we had a lot of Jews here and there wasn't anywhere else for them to go to school."

"Well, now, Burt, suppose you had lived back there in Revolutionary times, and you'd been asked to back up the principle of no taxation without representation, would you have said, 'But we drink coffee in our family—just a little bit of tea once in a while—so it doesn't make any real difference whether we pay that tax or not." He got the boy's eye—honest, young, intelligent, and asked pressingly, "Burt, what is a real difference?"

Aunt Lavinia said irritably, "Tim it's absurd of you to repeat that legend that it was the tax on tea that . . ."

"Hold your British tongue, Aunt Lavinia. We're not talking about tea." To Burt, sitting confused and clouded, he said, not as schoolteacher to student, but as one man to another, "The only reason you don't see this right away, Burt, the way your great-great-grandfathers saw the point about the tax on tea, is because up here in our safe little corner of the mountains we're too far away from the big world to feel the danger of something that's going on that is a whole lot worse than an unjust tax. We know it . . ." (Burt was in his "contemporary history" class) "we read about it, we look at photographs of it, but we don't feel it. Not yet." He drew a long breath and in a dozen passionate sentences, reminded the boy of some of the revolting news items they had read in that class.

BURT LISTENED, appalled more by the disgust and horror in Prof. Hulme's face than by facts beyond his imagining. Timothy went on, "I tell you, Burt, it's rather like an octopus that's fastened itself on some parts of the world—all this giving up of what everybody knows is fair play and civilized by the order of a man who's grabbed the machine guns. An octopus that keeps reaching out for more. Here in this country we've been so far away we haven't felt it yet—we've read about it, we've seen pictures of how it strangles the heart out of a country when it gets fastened on it, but it hasn't seemed to touch us at all—and here, all of a sudden, just now, this very day, one of those long slimy tentacles writhing around—this race-prejudice business—flicks a tip clear across the ocean into our valley, into our town. That's the way it looks to Mr. Dewey and me—as though without any warning, right from one minute to the next, going about our business here in safe old Clifford in Windward County, Vt., we look down and there is one of those hideous snake-like tentacles wrapping itself around the only thing that our town has got that's of any value—its honor, its tradition of fair play. Good gracious, Burt, why wouldn't we reach for the ax? And you, too, as soon as you have time to take in what's happened."

He had been carried away into eloquence, but he was not ashamed of it. He was moved by it. He expected Burt to be convinced by it. He paused to see what impression he had made.

After a silence Burt asked, timidly because of the fire with which Timothy had spoken, but with the sincerest, wondering interrogation, "But, Prof. Hulme, do you like Jews?"

Canby exploded into an involuntary yell of laughter. "There it is, Uncle Tim. You'll never turn that trick. It can't be done by talk. Not in real life."

Timothy said quickly to the Senior, "Did you hear what Canby said? You know what he means, don't you? He means you just aren't smart enough—that Clifford people won't be smart enough—to know what an abstract principle is."

Canby was really taken aback.

"Abstract principle!" he exclaimed in pitying astonishment. ". . . when a vote's going to be taken! Why, Uncle Tim, you are crazy. Where do you think you are? In a classroom?"

TIMOTHY TRIED again, without impatience, using all that he had learned in a lifetime of teaching about how to reach people's reason without getting hung up by wounding their self-respect. "Burt, it's perfectly natural that at the first look you don't get the point of this. There are some things we Americans take for granted so much, we just can't imagine what it would be to try to live without them. It's as if we stood under a great stone arch that has always been there, and a man comes along and says he'll give us a million dollars if we'll knock out just one little stone in the middle, at the top. We've never thought much about that stone. It's always been there. It's not very big. And a million dollars is a lot of money. But that's the stone that holds up the arch." He looked back at Burt's question and reflected. "You asked me just now if I really like Jews. Let's see, suppose you didn't like the looks of people with buck teeth. Would you, if somebody paid you a million dollars to do it, vote to put them in prison without trial? Or exclude their children from the schools? Or even make them ride in the freight cars instead of the passenger coaches? Look, Burt—this isn't a question of Jews or no Jews. It really hasn't anything to do with Jews, except that they happen to be the people Mr. Wheaton didn't like—the people it's the fashion nowadays not to like. Now think—your Uncle Walter is a Mason, isn't he, and his wife is a member of the Eastern Star. Suppose Mr. Wheaton hadn't liked Masons, and had said the academy could have his money only on condition that no student who was related to a Mason should be admitted. The principle's just the same. Don't you see that?" The question was put mildly without expectation of an answer. Burt gave it none, looking down at his hands, his face intent and thoughtful.

Mr. Dewey now said, not mildly at all, but with wrath, "My Goddy! Ain't there any Vermont left in us? Are we a-goin' to be told how to run our business in our own town by somebody that didn't even vote in Clifford—just because he's rich? I'd fight takin' his money if he laid down the law to us this way about anything."

"That goes without saying, doesn't it, Mr. Dewey?" said Timothy.

"I'm not so sure! I'm not so sure, the way things are nowadays. But anyhow I've said it. And I'll say it again. Loud, too." He waived the question for the time, looking at Burt, and went on, "Burt, your great-grandfather Hard and my father, Elias Dewey, were first cousins, and they went into the Civil War together. Your great-grandfather was a smart man, and got to be a colonel. My father was just an ordinary man and never got to be anything but a private. He went through four years of it and came back with a wooden leg and went into the sawmill business. He lived to be 'most 80 and, 's far as I remember, he never said a word about the war. But when he died we found he'd put in his will that he wanted the dates of his service put on his tombstone, and what regiment he was in, and this line out of a poem he'd learned to speak here in the 'cademy—'Fought and bled for Freedom's cause.' That's what he wanted, come time to die."

Mr. Dewey went on, "Now the Decoration Day committee always have you put a flag on Col. Hard's grave because you're his great-grandson. Do you remember what is on his tombstone?"

"Gave his life for the Union and to free fellow human beings from slavery," recited Burt automatically.

"Wa-al, now, listen. I'm not quite old enough to remember the Civil War myself, but I've heard my old people say that in those days there were lots of folks who kept asking the Union soldiers, 'But do you like niggers?' They just didn't get the point, see?"

"Yes, I see that," admitted Burt. "But . . ."

"Now let's consider your great-grandfather some more. He was the only Clifford man that ever got to be a high-up officer. We're all pretty proud of Col. Hard. Suppose now in 1861 some rich man that didn't like colored people had offered our town a million dollars not to send any volunteers to the Civil War. Suppose we'd talked it over, the way we're talking it over now, and said, 'Why, we hardly ever see a colored person up here anyhow. We're not the ones that are keeping them slaves!' And, 'Well, 't wouldn't make any real difference if the few men Clifford could send didn't go. And my! what this town could do with a million dollars!' I bet the boys of your age, the first time it was put to them, would ha' thought that sounded all right. But you tell me which would you rather have on your great-grandfather's tombstone—what's there now, or 'Voted to take money as pay for keeping the children of fellow citizens out of rights our country was founded to give to all its people'?"

He too, like Timothy, thought he had been eloquent, felt he had been unanswerable, had been moved by his own words, took for granted that Burt would be moved.

He was. He looked unhappy. But when the old man paused he murmured faintly, courageously, "I wouldn't like to see a whole lot of Jews in the 'cademy all the same."

Canby didn't laugh this time. He said with the sincerest sympathy, almost with compassion, "You see, Uncle Tim."

"What is it I'm supposed to see?" asked Timothy, and waited for an answer with an air of genuine interest in what Canby would say.

Canby rolled over on the couch to look at him derisively. "You know what, as well as I do. But if you want to hear it said—what you see is that there's no use trying to argue reasonably about prejudices. You can't keep people's minds on what you yourself admit is an abstract principle, unless you're talking about something they don't care anything about. The minute it's something they want—or don't want . . .! And my Heavens, when you're up against not only the heck of a strong feeling, but the heck of a lot of money, your abstract principle that's all right to bring up in a school debate, why it's blown galley-west!"

"Well, no-o-o, I can't say that I consider that point proved by anything Burt has said," commented Timothy slowly as if weighing the evidence for Canby's proposition. "I've had you in my classes. And I've had Burt. He's got just as good brains as you have. What makes you think he hasn't? That remark of his doesn't seem to me to prove he can't reason as well as you can. What it shows is that he lacks some of the information he needs to reason from. And since I'm the one that's got the information, that shows me up, not Burt."

MR. DEWEY PUT IN, "There's something the matter with that idea of yours, Hunter. And I'll tell you what 'tis. It's too gener'l. Now see if you can keep your mind on a point. Let anybody tell me 'pigs are dirty,' or 'dogs chase cats,' and what I want to know is 'which pigs?' 'whose dogs?' My old Don's been brought up with cats and he don't chase'm, any more'n I eat my meat raw. A pig that's had room enough to be clean in, ain't one quarter as dirty as a horse."

"I didn't know I'd been slandering dogs and pigs, Mr. Dewey."

"You never. It was folks. You said, 'People can't keep their minds on something that's just an idee, not when it interferes with their grabbin' what they want.' And I ask you, 'which people?' and, 'what idee?' The idee we're talkin' about may be new to you, Canby Hunter, and to the folks where you came from, but it ain't new to Clifford. Don't it stand to reason that in a town that's run its own business at Town Meetin' for 170 years in the same place, with everybody's vote counted equal—that folks may be can keep their minds on the idee of freedom and decent fair play to them that weren't on the winnin' side at the last election—even if 'tis kind of abstract? Folks that have read their own newspapers and figgered out their own accounts for the last century or so, and that argue the handle off the town pump all the year 'round over anything from the dog tax to what's goin' on in Washington, maybe that kind o' folks can keep their minds on the point of an argument, bettetr than some you've been runnin' with."

"Oh, yes, oh, yes. I get you now," said Canb , laughing. "It's the 'Vermonters are different from other people' line. But, Mr. Dewey, when you say that, all you mean is that they stayed, longer than most, back in the pre-factory era. What's left of what you call Vermontism is just a hangover. Vermonters can't be different now—and still get enough to eat. Mass production's turned the trick—it's welded all Americans into one lump, and don't you let anybody tell you different. It's just fooling yourself to . . ." He heaved himself up on his elbow and got out his pipe. "I didn't mean to say a word," he apologized. "Go on, Go on."

2-Day Conference Here Will Discuss New Opportunities

Fields not yet open to women—and why—will be spotlighted at the conference on opportunities in public service opening today at the Mayflower Hotel, under auspices of the Washington committte of women's professional relations.

Delegates to the two-day meeting will come from colleges, universities and girls' schools throughout the Nation. A battery of Government officials, party leaders and experts in professional relations will make the principal addresses and preside at the round-table discussions.

John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National Committee, will speak tonight on "Party Services." He will be followed by Miss Mabel T. Boardman, national officer of the American Red Cross, whose subject will be "Volunteer Community Service."

Secretary of Labor Perkins will preside at the session on "Standards for Public Service," while Dr. George Gallup, director of the American Institute of Public Opinion, will be presiding officer at the Saturday afternoon meeting on "Government Public Relations."

The newer public service fields, such as radio, movies, consumer education and the graphic arts, will be discussed—as well as all the established fields available under civil service.
